$20,000 IN ESQUIMALT

Two Men Charged In Bogus Bill Raid

An RCMP investigation into a counterfeiting racket has resulted in the arrest of two Greater Victoria men and seizure of about $20,000 in phoney United States bills found at Saxe Point Park in Esquimalt.

John Daniel Vosper, 21, of 2792 Millstream, and Robert Gordon Sewell, 20, of 1166 Rhoda Lane, appeared before justice of the peace Jack Fawcett in provincial court this morning.

Fawcett remanded both men in custody to Tuesday at the request of Crown prosecutor Wayne Smith.

A police spokesman said the investigation, spearheaded by the Vancouver RCMP commercial crime section and involving Vancouver and Victoria municipal forces, is continuing.

Police are conducting a number of house searches in the Victoria area and further arrests may be made. Officers declined to say whether they are looking for more counterfeit money or give any indication of how large a counterfeiting racket they are investigating.

An RCMP helicopter and tracking dog were used in the operation.

Both men surrendered without a struggle.

Police would not say where the money was found, other than it was somewhere in the park. All of the counterfeit money was in $20 U.S. bills.

A court official who saw the money described it as "crisp" and of "lousy" quality.

"It looked like it went through a washing machine," he said.

Smith asked for a three-day remand to give police more time to complete the investigation.

He told Fawcett that Sewell has at least six aliases and mentioned a warrant outstanding in the Nanaimo area.

He said police had not had sufficient time to investigate Vosper's background.

There are indications the pair will face other charges, but details won't be known until Tuesday when they are expected to enter pleas and apply for bail.

More Transit Shafts Feared

By AL FORREST

If the provincial government is going to dump the bus system on the municipalities, it must offer a financing formula that is fair and long-term, Victoria transportation committee chairman Ald. Bill McElroy said today.

"Under the present plan they can change it (their contribution) from year to year," McElroy said.

"The provincial government will increase its share before an election and lower it afterwards.

"We can't leave ourselves at the mercy of the balance-the-books guys or they will shaft Victoria again."

McElroy's comments, while strong, summed up the concerns of regional mayors and other officials who liked the idea of more local control for transportation but worried about the cost.

Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith said municipalities already have severe tax burdens and he opposes the provinicial government plan.

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young said B.C. Hydro is making big profits from electricity and should pay the bus costs because "they should keep the good and the bad, just as they always have."

Victoria Mayor Mike Young said the change was unfortunate while Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier and regional board chairman Jim Campbell saw advantages in local control of transportation policies.

The provincial government plans to turn the bus system over to the municipalities some time after next April 1.

Costs would be shared by the province and the municipalities. The provincial government would allow municipalities to raise their share through a surcharge on electricity bills or property taxes, or by adding up to three cents to the gasoline tax.

SCALPEL LEFT BEHIND

BRANDON (CP) — Four Brandon doctors being sued for negligence have admitted in court documents that a scalpel blade was left in the abdomen of a woman during an operation performed in November, 1975.

But in statements of defence filed in Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench, they deny any negligence and say they followed proper procedures in the diagnosis and treatment of the woman.

Milfoil Reaches Pender

VANCOUVER (CP) — Recreational boaters are suspected of introducing Eurasian milfoil weed into Magic Lake on South Pender Island, a provincial environment ministry spokesman said Friday.

Peter Newroth said patches of the weed now stretch for almost half a kilometre in the lake.

The government has completed a survey of 200 lakes in British Columbia and found that the milfoil weed — well known for its severe infestation of the Okanagan Lakes — has also covered 30 acres of Cultus Lake and is invading the area where the Sumas River joins the Fraser River.

Milfoil threatens the Magic Lake drinking water supply, Newroth said, but residents have been planning to switch over to another lake for their drinking water.

"It appears the weed is spread by people's activities," said Neworth. "So we're asking all boaters to clean the hull and propellers of their boats before they travel from one lake to another."

Newroth said the government does not plan any control measures other than posting warning signs. He said the boating public must take the initiative and then the government would respond to requests.

It's Staying Sunny!

Victoria is enjoying the hottest June on record and the sunshine should continue at least until Wednesday, the weather office said today.

Temperature records fell at both Pat Bay and Gonzales on Friday and new marks are also expected to be established today.

Friday's temperature was 27.3 at Pat Bay, breaking the old record for June 2 of 27.2 degrees set in 1970.

Downtown, the temperature hit 27.2 degrees, breaking the 1950 record of 25.7.

For today, the June 3 records are 25.6 (1970) at Pat Bay and 26.7 (1969) at Gonzales and by mid-morning it appeared both marks would fall.

Weather forecaster Ian Higgs said the only element disturbing the sunshine ridge is a low trough of fog working its way up the Washington coast.

The fog is beginning to enter the Strait of Juan de Fuca and may be quite prevalent on Sunday.

This would bring cooler temperatures near the water but the pattern of hot, sunny weather will continue just a few kilometres inland.

Beer Sales Jumping As Supplies Dry Up

Supplies of beer are running low in Victoria as customers begin stockpiling due to the threat of a strike-lockout in the industry.

In Vancouver, Carling O'Keefe has already been closed by a strike. The other breweries have voted to lock out their employees.

However, they have not yet served 72-hour lockout notice.

There is almost no Carling O'Keefe beer left on the shelves in Victoria and stocks of other brands are lower than normal.

"What we fear most of all is a rush by stockpilers," one liquor store manager said today. "That could wipe us out in a hurry."

The breweries were meeting with union leaders today in an effort to resolve the dispute.

The 260 employees at Carling O'Keefe have been without a contract since Dec. 31, while contracts at Molson's and Labatt's expired April 20. Strikers have said they won't return to work until they have a signed agreement.

In Victoria, Tex Enemark, deputy consumer affairs minister responsible for the Liquor Distribution Branch, said there is "a very real possibility of a long, dry summer" in the province.

He said the effect of the current breweries' dispute would be felt throughout the province, adding that beer supplies cannot be expected from Alberta where there already is a shortage caused by higher summer demand combined with a strike at Carling O'Keefe in Calgary.

Enemark added that the unions also would object to bringing beer in from other provinces.

'No Cod War' Fishermen Vow

VANCOUVER (CP) — Expulsion of United States fishermen from Canadian waters was supported Friday by the West Coast fishing community, despite fears the move will mean losses to some Canadian fishermen.

Canadian waters will be closed to American fishermen Sunday as an attempt to pressure the U.S. to get down to serious bargaining on fishing rights. The U.S. has retaliated by announcing its waters would be closed to Canadian fishermen.

Officials on both sides of the border, however, were careful not to call the development a fish war.

Ian Todd, head of the offshore commercial fisheries division, said in Vancouver: "We are not approaching it as a war. There is absolutely no way we are going to have a cod war on our hands.

"We're not trying to erect a great barricade of barbed wire across the equi-distance line." There may be a "buffer time" given to the fishboats to leave Canadian waters, he said.

Patrol boats and aircraft will check the 200-mile coastline, he said. U.S. boats fishing in Canadian waters will face penalties ranging from a reprimand to a jail sentence, a fine or confiscation of gear, vessels or catch, said Todd.

Todd said that the boats will not have to be out of Canadian waters by the deadline — they will simply have to stop fishing.

Both sides said they regret the action, a suspension of the 1978 interim reciprocal fisheries agreement, already provisionally approved by the two governments. Officials pledged to work towards a final settlement of disputed maritime boundaries and hydrocarbon resources. Special negotiators are to resume their talks June 19.

George Hewison, secretary-treasurer of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, said the closures "will create some problems for us, but to live with the deal we had was very bad for fishermen over-all."

Salmon fishermen restricted to Canadian waters said they will be denied access to an area they estimate can yield $6 million to $8 million a season.

However, salmon fishermen gained with the reopening Friday of Swiftsure Bank at the entrance of Juan de Fuca Strait. The bank, over which fish pass destined for American waters, was closed at U.S. insistence in an attempt to get a fisheries deal.

Halibut fishermen may not be affected, but if they are, they face loss of a fishery worth about $10 million. Canadians will have less competition for bottomfish such as cod. U.S. fishermen are estimated to have fished about $3 million worth of bottomfish last year.

With American fishermen out, Canadians will also get more shrimp. The main shrimping area is off Tofino, on the west coast of Vancou-

Teacher Training Cut Urged

The provincial government wants post-secondary institutions to cut back on the number of teachers they train, Education Minister Pat McGeer said Friday.

McGeer told the legislature that an average three-percent annual decrease in school enrolment means fewer teachers are needed.

An average annual 10-percent attrition rate among teachers keeps the student-teacher ratio fairly balanced, the minister said, but the balance can be thrown off if the number of teachers being trained continues at its current high level.

June 1 Deadline For Addicts

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

The Alcohol and Drug Commission plans to cut off the supply of methadone to all addicts who registered for the voluntary program after June 1.

Commission director Bert Hoskins revealed this Friday, one day after the deadline had passed.

Hoskins, in an interview from Vancouver, said only those addicts registered for methadone treatment before June 1 would be allowed to continue receiving the drug when the new compulsory treatment plan begins Jan. 1.

Those who start after will either have to withdraw from the drug by Dec. 31 or be liable for entry into the three-year compulsory program, he said.

News of the deadline stunned John Cantelon, supervisor of the Victoria Methadone Clinic. He said he was not aware the commission planned to take such an action.

"I had thought there would have been an amnesty between now and when the plan is due to start," he said.

Hoskins said a cut-off date had to be set some time and noted the methadone program has been offered for years in the province and addicts have had every chance to register for treatment.

"A person just can't flog in now and expect to circumvent the new program," he said.

In Victoria there were 17 addicts receiving methadone treatment on June 1. One other is due to start next

Bike Ride Ends at High Court

OTTAWA (CP) — When Richard Harvey Moore set out on a brief bicycle ride in Victoria two years ago he was beginning a gruelling 4,800-kilometre journey.

He didn't know it at the time. Nor did he know that he was on his way to the Supreme Court of Canada to fight an important legal battle.

Moore was cycling along Government Street April 19, 1976, when a police officer on a motorcycle roared up and demanded that he pull over. When Moore refused, the motorcycle patrolman forced him into a parked car.

The patrolman, Const. James Sutherland, asked for identification and was planning to charge him with running a red light. Moore said he didn't have any identification and refused to give his name.

Const. Sutherland grabbed him by the arm as he attempted to walk away, and a scuffle ensued. Moore, who suffered a broken finger, was handcuffed and charged with obstructing a police officer.

He was acquitted by a jury after the trial judge ruled that the B.C. Motor Vehicle Act does not require a cyclist to identify himself to police. Unfortunately for him, a B.C. appeal court did not agree, overturned the jury verdict and convicted him.

Undaunted, the 49-year-old Moore put $173 in his pocket, folded up a piece of plastic for overnight shelter, climbed on his 10-speed bicycle and headed east this spring to appeal to the highest court in the land.

"With $173 I almost starved to death," Moore, unemployed and living on welfare, said in an interview this week.

The Victoria-Ottawa journey took 28 days. He began April 28 and found himself slogging through snowstorms in the Rocky Mountains and Northern Ontario.

"There were times when I would have bought accommodation because it was cold but I couldn't afford it."

He slept wherever he could find shelter and managed to borrow replacement tires for his bike.

The high court has agreed to hear his case Tuesday morning. He said that so far his legal expenses have been handled by legal aid. He has obtained the services of Gowling and Henderson, a prestigious Ottawa law firm, to handle the Supreme Court appeal.

His lawyer is expected to argue that a person walking or cycling does not have to stop for police, and that a person has a right to remain silent when questioned on any subject by the police.

Moore said he wants the high court to make a definite decision, not simply to order a new trial.

"But I'm told the Supreme Court of Canada is impudent and afraid to show their power against the provinces."

He used to have a job in electronics but has not worked for at least two years. He said working means paying taxes to support a "lousy Liberal government" that has been in power for 37 of the last 43 years.

"Imagine. I should pay taxes to have a policeman jump me in the street and break my hand."

The court likely will complete the appeal in one day and is expected to reserve its decision. After the hearing Moore plans to stay around Ottawa to try to raise money for the bike trip back.

Police Board Backs Mayor

The Saanich police board won't be intimidated by either the threat of a strike by the police union or personal barbs at chairman Mayor Mel Couvelier.

In a statement Friday the board said it stands fully behind its chairman and decried personal attacks by the union against him.

The attacks are both unfair and improper, the statement said, adding the board considers such tactics inflammatory, malicious and detrimental to good labor relations.

Union members voted last week non-confidence in Couvelier's handling of the dispute and on Thursday union president Cpl. Phil Jamieson announced a strike vote will be held Monday.

The union wants incorporation of a cost-of-living allowance into the base salary rate negotiated in a two-year contract agreed upon by both sides on May 12.

The board wishes to apply the COLA separately from salary rates.

"We feel the established procedure should be used to settle this matter rather than resorting to a strike vote," the statement said.

It was signed by John Pendray, Miles Primrose, John Tribe and Reginald Midgley.

The board members noted the union had requested a Labor Relations Board hearing on May 25 and that at an informal meeting May 29 it was agreed the police union would put its position in writing.

They said they were dismayed the union is taking a strike vote while the matter is still before the LRB.

What Price Housewife?

OTTAWA (CP) — MPs put the economic value of housework at between $5,300 and $10,000 a year during Commons debate Friday on whether housewives should get pay or pensions.

"I would find it difficult to put a price on my wife," said Jim McGrath, Conservative social affairs critic, adding that he could never replace Margaret's maternal influence on his family.

"But if I were to lose her, I would have to pay $10,000 a year to a housekeeper." She would be eligible at age 65 for Canada Pension Plan benefits.

McGrath, father of six children, advocated the government deduct extra CPP contributions from the working spouse — usually the husband — to make housewives eligible for retirement pensions.

McGrath was one of four male MPs debating a private member's motion by Adrien Lambert (SC—Bellechasse) proposing the government consider some financial benefit to housewives.

McGrath, MP for St. John's East, called the idea "simple justice."

"They admit they would prefer to stay home but they need the money," said the father of six, arguing benefits of some kind were necessary to entice women to stay home.

Frank Philbrook (L—Halton) said housework "is a very satisfying role to many women," But later he said modern society "has made motherhood a lonely, isolated state."

He quoted studies putting the value of housework at $5,300 annually for a mother with one child between age 12 and 17. The work of a wife caring for four children, one less than a year old, was $8,400 a year.

Bus Costs Causing Worry

Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis said the provincial government's share of transportation costs will be set from year to year by the cabinet.

Curtis said he will announce details of the cost-sharing formula later "but it will be as generous as that provided for under present regulations (50-50 sharing) and superior to all other provinces."

From Victoria's viewpoint, McElroy said, this is the key statement by the provincial government on its new transportation plan.

"If they match the Ontario formula we will be delighted. We don't ask for more than that. Everything depends on the cost-sharing — and there must be a long-term contract, not one that changes every year."

In Ontario, he said, the provincial government pays 90 per cent of municipal transportation deficits and 75 per cent of capital costs.

"That's very fair. Will they give us that? And will they guarantee it for a long term?

"I don't like to scare anybody but we are talking about big money in transportation. If Victoria runs a transportation deficit of $20 million and it must be paid by 20,000 homeowners through their property tax, that makes a tax increase of $1,000 a house!"

McElroy said transportation costs should be linked to the gasoline tax, but on a provincial basis, or the price of gas will have sharp variations from town to town.

He said there is no good reason why transportation costs should be paid out of property taxes.

McElroy said it would be good to get local control of transportation, however, because B.C. Hydro had ignored the pleas of Victoria city council to ease the traffic jams at Yates and Douglas.

He said whether Victoria will win or lose by this transportation change is a matter of financing. Everything depends upon the cost-sharing formula.

In Saanich, Mayor Couvelier said regions at last will get more autonomy in establishing bus routes and service levels.

He predicted that local politicians will also face a challenge in finding economies within the present transit system in order to expand the level of service, particularly to the rural fringes of the capital.

Couvelier said he has no illusions about the financial impact of the transit shake-up.

"There is no question but that it will cost Greater Victoria residents more money, because of the fact we have been receiving subsidies from the whole province through the power rates charged by B.C. Hydro," he said.

Referring to one of the financing options, which allows local authorities to add a three-cent-a-gallon tax on gasoline, Couvelier said a quick calculation shows this would more than cover the municipalities' present share of the deficit.

In Oak Bay, Mayor Smith said the government is laying an untenable burden on the municipalities.

"I don't think municipalities can stand any more burdens," he said.

"It places another burden on homeowners who are already being squeezed. This is going to squeeze them some more."

Smith said putting a surtax on gasoline in the Greater Victoria and Greater Vancouver areas may result in drivers purchasing their gasoline outside the urban areas.

"I don't think that Greater Victoria and Greater Vancouver and the residents in those areas should have to assume the responsibility of Hydro transit.

"Transit is a public expense that should be borne by the province. The taxpayers are paying for highways and bridges in other parts of the province as part of their share of transportation costs."

On the Lower Mainland, White Rock Mayor Don MacDonald Friday predicted "rapid transit is on its way," for Greater Vancouver.

Macdonald, chairman of the Greater Vancouver Regional District (GVRD) transportation committee, described as "a landmark piece of legislation" the proposals which would allow individual municipalities to decide on their own form of transit and level of service.

Gov't Will Stop Baby-Sale Trend

VANCOUVER (CP) — Any trend toward the selling of babies to couples who want to adopt a child will be stopped by the British Columbia government, John Noble, deputy human resources minister, said Friday.

Noble's comment came after former attorney-general Alex Macdonald called in the legislature for changes in the Adoption Act to prevent the sale of babies.

Changes are needed to prevent expectant mothers, "usually young and not married, looking for the highest bidder for their child," Macdonald said.

He said a Vancouver lawyer is offering to pay any expectant mothers' pregnancy expenses on behalf of clients seeking to adopt a baby.

Such offers could create a baby market and circumvent orderly adoption of children through the human resources department with proper counselling to protect the interests of the mother and child, Macdonald said.

The adoption offer was made by lawyer Joel Kerbel in classified advertisements in city newspapers May 29.

The ad said Kerbel had clients wanting to adopt a baby or young child.

"They (the clients) can assure a first-class, loving, enriching and financially secure home and are prepared to assume pre-natal and- or post-natal expenses," the ad said.

Kerbel said Friday his clients are a husband and wife seeking to adopt a child.

The ad attracted a number of responses Kerbel said, who declined further comment.

Macdonald said later there was nothing illegal about the ad. "But in time, we are going to have young mothers auctioning their babies off to the highest bidder," said Macdonald.

Betty Green, chairman of Vancouver Pro Life, an anti-abortion organization, said a shortage of babies available for adoption makes the province vulnerable to a black-market in babies. Even families willing to take a handicapped or non-white baby or child are finding it difficult to adopt, she said.

Sheila Lonegren, a social worker in human resources' adoption placement office in Vancouver, said there are "many more people qualified and willing to adopt than there are children available for adoption."

The reason for the shortage is that increasing numbers of unwed mothers are deciding to keep their babies, Lonegren said.

Attorney-General Garde Gardom said the human resources ministry has the power to make regulations under the Adoption Act which would prevent baby selling.

Publishing Company Probed

The RCMP commercial crime section is carrying out a probe into the financial affairs of the Vancouver Island Publishing Co. Ltd., publishers of the defunct triweekly Victorian newspaper.

An RCMP spokesman said the investigation began some months ago following a complaint of an alleged shortage of funds.

Police have seized books and records but the spokesman would not elaborate.

Formerly known as Alsen Enterprises it switched to its present name on Oct. 29, 1971.

The Victorian folded on Nov. 4, 1977.

FIVE-YEAR BUDGET FORECAST ORDERED

McGEER
...educational democracy

All educational institutions in B.C. will have to give the provincial government five-year budget forecasts, Education Minister Pat McGeer said Friday.

McGeer said that in the next few weeks his ministry will ask school boards, colleges and universities for a five-year forecast of what their expenses are going to be.

At present, only capital costs are subject to five-year planning.

McGeer said that while educational institutions will be asked for long-range forecasts, he hopes the government will also be able to give a five-year outline of its spending proposals.

He said he hopes the government will therefore be able to provide taxpayers with a better idea of their taxes and mill rates.

Dennis Cocke (NDP—New Westminster) criticized McGeer's call for five-year plans, saying they will have to be based on guesswork. He said that while McGeer stated school costs have skyrocketed, the provincial budget has also increased — by 300 per cent.

Education for the Isolated

Establishment of an Open Learning Institute in B.C. was announced Friday by Education Minister Pat McGeer.

"The institute will guarantee to all adults in B.C., for the first time in our history, access to the full range of educational opportunities regardless of the financial circumstances, place of residence or past educational achievements of the individual," McGeer told the legislature.

"It is educational democracy in the fullest sense of the word."

He said the institute will provide programs of study leading to a degree in arts and sciences, careers in technical and vocational areas and basic adult education for the geographically and socially isolated.

The minister said that to achieve this end, the institute will manage needed support services, and develop programs which will be distributed by distance education methods such as correspondence, cablevision and tapes.

McGeer said the institute will make curricula available to the colleges and with them develop study centres and tutorials by telephone.

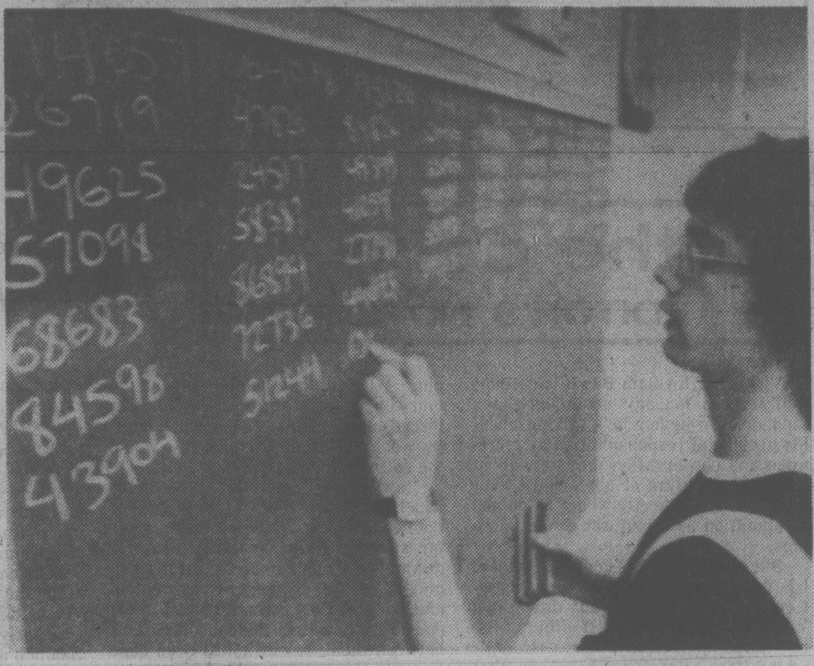
"The new institute will manage a media acquisition, production and delivery system, and also an inter-library loan support service in co-operation with universities, colleges and institutes," the minister said.

Four members of the Interior University Programs Board were appointed to the institute's board. They are Lloyd Houle of Cranbrook, Dr. Dugald McGregor of Summerland, James Pritchard of Prince George and Fred Weber of Terrace.

Other members include Terry Ryan of Courtenay, Dr. Bryon Beirne of Simon Fraser University, Dr. Sam Macey of the University of Victoria, Betsy MacDonald of Vancouver and Basil Stuart-Stubbs of the University of B.C.

Dennis Cocke (NDP—New Westminster), opposition education critic, said he had anticipated legislation setting up the institute but was pleased it had not been presented because of what he said were the minister's arbitrary methods.

Cocke said he is "very much in favor of a thoughtful and carefully provided program of education for those who are regionally and geographically isolated."



Jamie Archibald jots down 6,190 numerals of Pi

Jamie's Crazy Habit Zeroes in on Numbers

EDMONTON (CP) — Jamie Archibald, 18, has this crazy habit.

Archibald's phenomenal memory for numbers established a world record Wednesday.

At a blackboard in M. R. LaZerte Composite High School, he wrote down, from memory, 6,190 numerals of the infinite number Pi.

That was 1,140 more numbers than the current Guinness Book of World Records lists. It took three hours and eight minutes.

Pi, ancient memories of high school math will recall, is the number used with the radius of a circle to establish that particular circle's area.

But in higher mathematical circles, Pi is unending, going on into infinity.

Learning 6,190 of those sequential numbers started on a challenge for the young man.

"Last year, in Grade 12, a guy in my class challenged me to know 100 of the numbers by Friday. I did it."

In March, he tracked down a book written by two French mathematicians containing one million of the numbers in Pi.

Archibald started memorizing — and Wednesday, under the watchful eyes of two witnesses and a dozen friends, he beat the record of 5,050, set last year by Michael John Poultney of England.

Crime Keeps Rising

VANCOUVER (CP) — The city of Vancouver will have its worst year ever for crime in 1978 if the current trend continues, especially in the congested West End area dominated by high-rise apartments.

"We simply don't have the answer as to why crime in the city has shot up this year, there is no simple answer," deputy police chief Tom Dixon said Thursday.

Strong-armings are up 30 per cent and theft of autos are up nearly 80 per cent.

Current trends indicate the number of holdups in which guns are used will more than double this year, while sex crimes such as rape are likely to increase by 20 per cent.

On the basis of homicides so far this year, the murder rate in the city would appear headed for a decrease of about 15 per cent, but police statisticians say the numbers involved are too small to give an accurate projection.

For the first five months this year, half of all the holdups and theft of autos and one-third of all strongarmings in the city occurred in the West End.

Police classify crime in two categories: violent and preventable. Violent crime is tabulated on a city-wide basis, while figures on preventable crime, which police believe can be prevented if victims take the necessary precautions, is on a district basis.

The West End comes into district one, an area of the city bounded by Beatty, Pender and Cambie streets in the east, Burrard Inlet, English Bay and False Creek.

It has an estimated 40,000 night-time population and, because for police purposes the district encompasses the downtown business core, there are at least 160,000 daytime residents.

While small in area compared with other police districts in the city, it has the greatest concentration of people and it is policed by the least number of men.

The complement is 96 uniformed police constables and 20 non-commissioned officers. Of this amount, said district one Inspector Bill Baird, "you can count on 15 per cent away from the job any given day due to annual or weekly leave, court time and sickness."

The number of police in the West End and other city police districts hasn't changed appreciably in six years.

Bear Victim Marks Birthday

FORT NELSON (CP) — Italian bicyclist Giorgio Mazza, mauled and dragged into the bush by a black bear last Saturday, blew out 40 candles Friday on a cake baked by nurses at Fort Nelson General Hospital as 10 nurses sang "Happy Birthday."

Mazza was admitted to hospital in serious condition and received 300 stitches to his head, arms and torso after being attacked by a black bear 190 kilometres northwest of Ft. Nelson on the Alaska Highway.

Now he's back on the road — to recovery — and the birthday party Friday marked another event: The 200 stitches which patched together his tattered scalp were removed and he may be released in a week.

Dr. Tony Kenyon said when paramedics arrived at the scene by helicopter Mazza had no pulse or blood pressure. He was given a blood transfusion on the spot and admitted to hospital three hours after the incident.

Mazza, an avid cyclist who had cycled from Anchorage to Whitehorse last year, was finishing his Alaska Highway trip between Whitehorse and Dawson Creek when he was attacked.

He dismounted when he saw the bear — a strategy he employs when attacked by dogs — but the bear attacked, grabbing him by the back of the neck and dragged him 30 metres off the road and through a barbed wire fence.

A passing motorist witnessed the incident and distracted the bear which was shot by another motorist.

Head nurse Penny Cooper said his family had considered coming from Italy to see that he got proper care, but he assured them he was being treated well.

Cooper said Mazza, who barely speaks English, told the nurses he has "no remorse" about his Canadian adventure and that he feels "very lucky."

French in the Schools

Peter Dorazio, vice-chairman of the Greater Victoria school board, made all the correct remarks on Friday when asked about the announcement by Education Minister Pat McGeer that the core curriculum must be available in French for all children whose parents ask for it by September, 1979.

"It's a good idea, it's timely, but it will have no significant impact on the system (in the Greater Victoria district) because the demand will not be great," said Dorazio.

What a curious change from the position of the school board just three nights earlier! At that time the board decided that, although the demand was there, it would not expand French programs in the elementary grades because it hadn't received as much money as it had hoped for from the federal government.

The board went so far as to cancel plans it had made to expand the French immersion program by starting two new classrooms of immersion students in the Gordon Head area. The reason given quite clearly was not lack of students but lack of money.

We have long supported the school board's principle of fiscal responsibility, but in this case it seems that the board's penchant for saving pennies may possibly hurt, not only a few children in this district, but the principles of unity of our entire country.

It has for some time been agreed (by nearly everyone except the Trudeau government) that to try to implement bilingualism by force-feeding civil servants French is to approach the problem from the wrong end. A better way to go, it is said, is to bring about bilingualism gradually by making as many children as possible bilingual through programs in the schools.

McGeer, not normally known for his flights of fancy, goes so far as to call this expansion in the French curriculum, "part of the government's policy to build national unity and the Canadian dream."

Yet what is the Greater Victoria school district saying? It is sending across the country the message that it doesn't feel French is important enough to bother about if it is going to cost the board itself a red cent. It will expand the program only if Ottawa will kick in every necessary dollar.

Trustees complained because Ottawa had seen fit to grant them only $160,000 for as "support grants" for French programs; they had asked for more than $430,000. What the trustees neglect to say, however, is that the $160,000 is in fact an increase of about $40,000, or 30 per cent, from the amount Ottawa granted them last year. In a year when all governments are trying to practise fiscal responsibility and restraint, a 30 per cent increase is hardly to be sneezed at.

Despite Dorazio's fine words then, McGeer's announcement can be read as quite a different message to the Greater Victoria board: a message that if it doesn't do more for French programs in the next 15 months, the provincial government will force it to.

Unless the board's attitude changes, the provincial intervention will be necessary and welcome.

Tin Shed Tyranny

Ald. Bob Wright and the rest of Victoria council have every reason to be furious with the federal government over its intransigent attitude towards its proposed buildings at the entrance to the Inner Harbor. Wright said this week that Ottawa plans to go ahead and erect a 30,000-square-foot warehouse on the old Victoria Machinery Depot property on Dallas Road despite the fact that the city has on several occasions rejected the design of the building.

It's just another example in a long series of instances in which the provincial and federal governments ignore all sorts of municipal zoning and building regulations whenever it suits their convenience to do so. Their arguments are always the same: since municipalities are mere creations and "children" of the more senior levels of government, they cannot require their "parents" to take any action or refrain from taking any action. The provincial government, in fact, went so far a few years ago as to pass a special law exempting itself from all municipal bylaws and regulations; the law remains on the books.

Legally and constitutionally, the senior levels of government are undoubtedly quite correct in their stand. But politically and morally, it is a different story.

With the creation of municipalities in B.C., they were given power and authority over zoning, building design and such matters. If the senior governments have enough faith in their children to allow them to take responsibility for these matters for all other builders and developers, surely they should have enough faith — or for that matter, common courtesy — to be governed by the same rules.

The senior governments have been delighted to see the city working to improve the Inner Harbor and approaches to it; yet Ottawa now will mar that work by sticking up on Dallas Road a building that planner Geoff Greenhalgh describes as "the most basic tin shed available."

The city may not have any legal means to stop the federal government from implementing its plans, but residents of the area can, and should, let Ottawa know forcefully how they feel about its actions.

Could Downtown Die? Sam Bawlf Says Yes

Victoria MLA Sam Bawlf is not normally noted for any doom-and-gloom tendencies, whether he's talking about his provincial responsibilities as recreation and conservation minister, about the political future of his Social Credit party or about the city where he gained a reputation as a restorer of old buildings.

But in recent weeks doom-and-gloom has been the tone of Bawlf's conversation when he talks about downtown Victoria and its future. "If either of the two major department stores (Eaton's or the Bay) were to relocate now, that would spell the end of downtown Victoria as a retail shopping area," he said recently. "And both of them are looking at it. Those moves could be not that far down the road, and we aren't doing a thing about it."

He defines "relocation" by Eaton's or the Bay as either of them setting up another store somewhere in a suburban shopping mall, even if the downtown stores remained. The new store would draw off enough shoppers that the downmtown retail core there could no longer survive, he believes.

Bawlf says that would be disastrous for the entire city of Victoria. The restaurants and hotels cannot survive on the tourist trade alone; they need some help during the off-season months from Greater Victoria residents, most of whom are drawn downtown by the shopping. Without that help, many of the tourist-oriented enterprises would be forced out of business. The tourist industry would suffer, and in the end so would the entire Victoria economy.

Bawlf lists a number of problems which he sees as causes of the situation: the two main department stores are too far apart to form a natural focus for downtown shopping, the natural shopping lanes (Government Street, Centennial Square, Fort Street, Yates Street) end abruptly with no logical connections between them, too little has been done to solve the traffic and parking problems that often make downtown shopping inconvenient, information is not available on which merchants could make decisions to set up business in the downtown area.

He places the blame for many of these problems squarely on the pillars of city hall. The city administration is particularly to blame for the dearth of information available about downtown, he argues. Merchants interested in setting up in any shopping centre are deluged by the centre developer with information about the place — the size of market it has cornered, the competition that would be faced by the merchant, the possibilities for expansion. All this data helps the businessman decide if a certain shopping centre would be an economic location for him.

In contrast, Bawlf said, no such information exists about downtown. "If somebody wants to set up a retail operation downtown and he walks into the city hall planning department, they can tell him how big his building is allowed to be and how high. Straight zoning, nothing else."

The result is that businesses are far more likely to locate in shopping centres where they can make an informed decision about the possibilities of success, rather than just guessing as they do if they go downtown.

The minister is undoubtedly right that the information gap is a serious problem in looking at future downtown development. Yet it somehow seems unfair that in Victoria, city hall should be required to spend the taxpayers' money on such items as market studies when the private sector — the shopping centre developers — takes care of it in the outlying municipalities, such as Saanich and Esquimalt.

Bawlf's argument is that it is not a question of fairness. It is, to him, a question of need — and he sees the need as being so great that someone must step in to fill the information vacuum before it is too late. City hall has the resources to do it the most easily.

Moreover, he says, in the end, it is Victoria city hall and Victoria taxpayers who will benefit the most from the information or lose the most if it is not done. He notes that more than half the city's tax revenue comes from commercial and industrial property. If downtown were to fade away into a wasteland, that revenue would be drastically reduced. City hall would probably have to cut back on needed spending programs and the city's residential taxpayers would probably have to pay higher property taxes.

"The problem is that people think it (the death of downtown) can't happen here," Bawlf says. "But it can. It's happened in other cities."

Still, a fading glimmer of optimism remains. "But in other cities, they've been able to revitalize their downtowns, make them very exciting places. That can happen here too, if we just go about it the right way." — B.McL.

Saying Goodbye to Girlhood

"Marion was always a madcap," said my mother. The description of her youngest sister seemed apt enough.

Like me, my Aunt Marion was what in those days was described as an "afterthought" — a baby who arrived years after the family was thought to be complete. When I was born she was just entering her teens and acted as a sort of nursemaid to me during my first winter when I had pneumonia and Mother was ill and unable to care for me.

"I'm surprised you survived at all," Marion said years later. "I had to get up in the middle of the night and give you your bottle. I tasted it once and liked it so much that I ended up by drinking half of it every night. Do you forgive me?"

A Flapper!

I would have forgiven worse than that. Marion swept through our staid family like a breeze. As a young woman in the early 1920s she was the only one of her five sisters who qualified as a flapper. I found her fascinating.

She wore silk stockings and painted her lips red. Her hair was always done in the latest style to reach Vancouver, at one period in puffs over the ears which my father called rats' nests. She smoked! Boys flocked around in such numbers that even my grandmother smiled.

One of them, Bob Hunter, played the banjo. On summer evenings they sat on the verandah steps singing, their voices floating up to my bedroom (for I spent much of my holiday time at my grandmother's).

The family thought Marion's fancies would settle on Bob Hunter but no, she fell head over heels in love with Bill Wharton. He was a bank clerk who was thought to resemble the youthful Prince of Wales, who recently had visited Vancouver, setting female hearts aflutter and being cheered wherever he went.

The other boy friends still came around, even when Bill was transferred to the Okanagan, but no longer as suitors. They were subdued and the verandah concerts gradually petered out.

Sometimes I surprised Marion crying, though she always wiped her eyes and brightened up for my benefit. Then Bill began to get leave more frequently. Marion's happiness when he was coming for a visit was so catching that everyone went around the house looking cheerful.

Summer faded and it was back to school and the rambling rectory in Burnaby. Things there were lively too. During the summer the men of the parish had completed building a church hall. Now it had to be paid for and there were whist drives and home baking sales and church suppers.

The big event of the autumn was to be an entertainment planned by Mr. Hill, a church warden who was active in amateur theatricals. He settled on a variety concert with each performer doing his or her specialty. Cleverly, he cast his talent net outside our Anglican ranks.

Mr. MacDonald who had the corner grocery store was a sober-sided Presbyterian but his daughter Annie jumped at the chance to release her shrill soprano in a program that began with The Bells of St. Mary's.

Mr. Auvache, the street car conductor, officially a Roman Catholic, let it be known that his skills as a magician were available. He and the others were encouraged by the knowledge that they would appear at the non-denominational hall at Edmonds, which accommodated everything from dances to political meetings.

Mr. Hill, calculating the number of their families and friends, said with a wink: "You don't have to be an Anglican to buy tickets."

Dad courteously declined an invitation to render The Lost Chord or The Minstrel Boy. His baritone had rusted with the years, he said. But my Aunts Jean and Irene would come over from Victoria to represent the family.

From the time they were little girls they loved to dress up and perform before an audience of one and upwards. They were a delightful study in contrasts, Jean blonde and bubbly, Irene dark and dignified.

Jean wrote skits and songs that were warmly applauded in the drawing-rooms of Victoria and Vancouver. They danced and mimed. Mr. Hill was happy to present them to a larger audience and they were as thrilled as if Hollywood had called them.

One evening shortly before the concert Mother had to make a telephone call to Mr. Hill which shook him to his boots. His groan was audible to all of us sitting around the living-room. She told him that Jean had been knocked out by one of her recurrent asthma attacks.

"But it's all right," Mother hastened to assure him. "Her younger sister Marion knows the part. She's a pretty girl, with lots of life, and I know you won't be disappointed."

Mr. Hill was at the stage where a producer knows that everything will be a disappointment. However, he brightened up when he saw Marion at dress rehearsal. It took place on the Thursday evening. The shows were to be on Friday and Saturday and looked like being sell-outs.

"She's not Jean. She has a different quality," he told my mother. To Marion he said: "God bless you, my dear. Always remember, the show must go on."

Marion and Irene stayed at the rectory which meant that its quiet rooms were filled with laughter, shared by Mother who usually went silent under the weight of her household cares. Imagine the added excitement when on Friday afternoon Bill Wharton turned up unexpectedly at the front door. Marion whooped and flung herself at him.

But this was a different Bill. He was pale and somehow shaken as if he had just walked away from a bad accident. He detached her arms, ignored her generous lips and muttered something about going into the garden where they could talk privately.

For a long time they walked up and down the paths between the desolate rose bushes, talking earnestly. I know because I watched. They reached a decision and stopped. They looked hard at one another, then Marion clutched him and they kissed. They walked back to the house holding hands.

Marion's face was drained of joy. "Where's Harold?" she asked. Mother pointed to the little room which Dad called his study. Marion tapped at the door and, still holding Bill's hand, obeyed Dad's summons to enter.

After a long interval Dad came out. His frown at Mother said: "Don't ask me now." His voice said: "Helena, would you please telephone Chief Devitt and ask him to come over at once. I'll explain when he gets here."

We shuddered with premonitions of disaster. We knew at that moment that Bill had done something bad. Chief Devitt commanded the miniscule Burnaby police force.

Marion remained dry-eyed when he came and, after a brief conversation with Dad, took Bill away in his car. I'm not sure how we children learned the sad facts but for the last few months Bill had been stealing money from the bank. When he knew his thefts had been discovered and his arrest was imminent, he fled. He had to see Marion once more.

"I'll phone Mr. Hill and say you've been taken ill," said Mother, but Marion shook her head. "I can't let everyone down," she said. "Besides it will keep my mind off things." Then in a passable imitation of Mr. Hill: "After all, my dear, the show must go on."

Last Tears

Appear she did, the two nights running. The womenfolk of the family insisted that she was strained and not herself. I thought she was funny and brilliant. To judge from the applause, so did the audience.

"Gosh, you were brave," I said many years later when I was a grown man and she a comfortable matron (long married but not to Bill. She had been whisked off to visit a strict aunt in Halifax while he vanished into sterner custody.)

"Most young women in a situation like that would have had hysterics and cried their eyes out."

"Oh, I cried," she said. "After the show that Friday night I wept buckets. I soaked the pillow. My last tears." She thought for a moment and then amended that. "The last tears of my girlhood."

Park Ideas

There has been some publicity on putting a tourist booth in Goldstream Park by private persons. Most campers go to parks to get away from it all. This would start a precedent for more commercial outlets in parks, as witnessed by what has happened to the causeway. However, a commercial kiosk could be put up in Westbrook Centre; most campers would go there to shop as it is the closest shopping centre to the park.

As most parks have bulletin boards, the ministers of tourism or recreation should post a list of the nearest tourist bureaus, plus any local activities for the area. The bulletin boards could be put to much more informative use for tourists. So lets keep our parks as natural as they should be.

We went camping on the May long weekend in Qualicum Falls Parks. The noise was very annoying to say the least; it went on until one and two o'clock in the morning. It consisted of tapes and speakers competing to see which had the loudest volume.

The problem seems to be a lack of patrol people. The parks have one man covering Qualicum Falls, Englishman River, and Rathtrevor Parks. All are very large and far apart. With the coming of travel and unemployment so high, the ministers of recreation or tourism should hire extra people to patrol and enforce the curfew. Most campers don't mind talk around a campfire all night, but blaring speakers will hardly encourage tourists to stay in the parks. — O. Henderson, 1146 Goldstream Avenue.

Right to Life

Until May 14, I had never attended any kind of a protest or demonstration, having mentally designated such actions to the left wing radicals. Although I am very much against abortion and the accompanying decline in our nation's moral and social structure, I have always felt somewhat helpless in the face of what seemed to be overwhelming odds. I must confess that I set out for the Pro-Life Rally at the legislative buildings with considerable fear and trepidation,

Instead of the atmosphere of gloom I expected, I was greeted with what turned out to be a real "celebration of life." The enthusiasm of the hundreds present, particularly the scores of young adults, and their refusal to be cawed by the 10 to 12 militant feminists present, have given me courage to believe that the re-attainment of respect for unborn human life is still a possibility.

I do wish to thank those who had the courage to speak out on behalf of the unborn children of our nation: Mr. John Powers, Ms. Margot Ney, Arla Rendle, Dr. Frank Murphy and the very Reverend Dean Brian Whitlow. Their boldness, plus the excellent turn out, has had a tremendous effect in my community and many who stayed home this time have already committed themselves to joining forces for the next Right-to-Life Rally in our city. — Rose de Jong, 786 Cave Street.

He Was Out of Line

On behalf of the Victoria Labor Council, I wish to protest the recent comments of Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier in regard to the woman's representative of the Rape Relief Centre when she appeared at the meeting of the Greater Victoria Inter-Municipal Committee on May 9 in quest of a grant.

His references to the women's attire were uncalled for and hurt the feelings of many people, including delegates to this council. We feel the application for a grant should have been judged on its merits, not on the basis of the dress of the lady who appeared. — L. Ryan, Secretary-Treasurer, Victoria Labor Council.

Scotland Hits the Bottle

By ED BLANCHE

GLASGOW — The Scots are hitting the bottle so hard that they face an alcoholism problem of "epidemic proportions" by 1985, welfare agencies report.

They have gone "on the bevvy," Glasgow slang for boozing, to drown their sorrows amid critical unemployment, industrial decline and a mountain of social ills.

"If alcohol abuse was treated as an illness, the west of Scotland would be considered to be already suffering from an epidemic," said Councillor Albert Long of Strathclyde Regional Council, which governs the industrial sprawl around this major port city.

The Scottish Council on Alcoholism said that alcoholism in Scotland, with only 10 per cent of Britain's 56 million population, is four times as high as it is in England and Wales. In parts of the whisky-drinking Highlands, it is 12 times as high.

The council estimated there are as many as 112,000 "problem drinkers" and at least 25,000 alcoholics in Scotland.

More than 200,000 workers in Scotland are on welfare, one in 11. Many of Glasgow's world-famed shipyards have closed or are scrambling for business, any business. Dozens of factories have closed in recent years.

The problem is most visible in Glasgow's decaying inner city in such slum districts as the Gorbals and Barrowfield, which urban specialists say are among the most deprived areas of Western Europe.

Pathetic groups of alcoholics lie slumped around grimy derelict tenements taking the fast lane to oblivion — guzzling hair lacquer or cheap wine spiked with methylated spirits.

Rev. Gratien McEvoy, a Franciscan Roman Catholic priest active in helping Glasgow's derelicts, said he once counted more than 300 empty lacquer bottles littered around one Gorbals hangout under a railway bridge.

Willie Blaney, chairman of the Clydebank Council on Alcoholism, said that women and children now drink as heavily as men and worsen the problem.

"When I started in this field, there was one woman to every 15 men with an alcohol problem," he said. "Now the ratio is one to three."

McEvoy noted: "We're going to have an explosion of teen-age drinking. Years ago, most alcoholics were men in their 50s. Now we get confirmed alcoholics in their 20s."

The crisis has triggered major social problems. Police officers and sociologists blame drink for an alarming increase in violent crime in the Strathclyde region.

Nancy Ballantyne, head of Strathclyde's police committee, blamed women drinkers for a sharp rise in domestic murders.

"It's the working-class love triangle," she said. "Women go into pubs in a way they didn't in the past and form illicit relationships."

The Scots probably drink no more than anyone else. It is the ferocious way they do it. Sociologists say much of the problem lies in the macho image of the boys in the bar.

"It's a peculiar Scots machismo thing," a social worker explained. "If you don't drink yourself into oblivion you're a poof.

Blaney claims that too little has been done at an official level to combat the ravages of Scotland's drinking. Most efforts have been made by voluntary groups led by campaigners like Blaney and McEvoy, who run Alban House, a converted Methodist church in the Gorbals, to help alcoholics.

But recently some big companies have run programs with government agencies to educate employees in the dangers of excessive drinking.

The Scottish Council on Alcoholism estimated that heavy drinking and alcoholism costs Scottish industry up to the equivalent of $100 million a year in lost production.

The Scottish Health Education Unit has launched a television campaign to dispel the myth that heavy boozing is manly.

But, said the unit's director, Dr. David Player: "The brewers spend £50 million a year on increasingly sophisticated advertising. We've got an annual budget of £100,000. We're fighting a David-and-Goliath battle.

Divorce: Don't Blame Politicians

DOUGLAS FISHER

OTTAWA — A few days ago an MP I know told me that he was "separated" after 30 years of marriage and a divorce was in process. I remembered that in the '60s, as an MP, he had had some impatience with the parliamentarians compaigning for divorce reform — such as the late Arthur Roebuck, Frank Howard, Arnold Peters and Bob McCleave. Now he was another of the growing many in divorce proceedings.

His news coincided with the arrival of a Statscan census study titled "Marital Status and Nuptiality in Canada" prepared by K. G. Basavararajappa. The study gives more data on divorce and marriage breakdown in Canada than most of us would ever want to know. But one of the first tables I picked out covered my MP friend. It showed the "duration of marriage" for those divorced in the years between 1969 and 1974. (1974 is the last year for definite statistics in this study).

After divorce was made so much freer in 1968, an unbelievable 35 per cent of the divorces in 1969 struck marriages which had lasted 20 years or more. By '73 and '74 this percentage had dropped to 25. That is, one-quarter of divorces are for those married over 20 years. A closer breakdown of this last figure shows that in 1974 14 per cent of divorces were for couples married 25 years or more.

The study confirms one popular notion: The number and rate of divorces in Canada are both on the upswing. But, surprisingly, it doesn't substantiate another popular idea: that marriage is a dying institution. There's lots of proof that most divorced persons remarry fairly soon. None of this "once bitten, twice shy."

Politicians and Parliament get the blame for so much today we might load the proliferation of divorce on them, particularly on one Pierre Trudeau, the minister of justice who put through the new divorce laws of 1968.

Before 1900 there were never more than 20 divorces a year in all Canada. The legal ground was limited, few provinces had divorce court arrangements. Then there was the prevailing Victorian attitude that the family was the most sacred and worthy of all human linkings. Even by the end of the first Great War the number of divorces seems tiny — in 1921 only 558. By 1931 this had grown to 700; by 1941 to 2,500; by 1951 5,200. The census of 1961 showed 6,500 divorces, then — boom. The 1971 census showed 20,685, and by 1974 this had zoomed to 45,019. (Our divorce rate is still less than half the American, and slightly below the British. Remember also there are 11 million of us married.)

The data also demonstrate that marriage breakdowns leading to divorce are much less likely in rural regions and communities than in the big cities.

Divorce is the deliberate pursuit of getting "unmarried", almost the opposite of getting married. If the divorce figures appall you, take heart from the marriage figures. Never has marriage been more popular, and never have those marrying been younger.

Between 1970 and 1972 there were 210 remarriages for every 1,000 males divorced and 141 remarrages for every 1,000 females divorced. These rates far exceed the remarriage rates for the widowed. Clearly marriage is not wrong in the minds of those divorcing. It is only the particular marriage that was wrong. The crudest way to see marriage's popularity is in the changed proportion of those married from 1911 to 1971. In 1911 54.2 per cent of men and 56.8 per cent of women were married. By 1971 the proportions were 65.1 per cent men and 64.1 per cent women.

On balance — and this is a light summation — I don't think we should blame Mr. Trudeau or Parliament or MPs for the 1968 divorce reform. The author of the study quotes one Kingsley Davis, an American: "A couple aged 20 and 23 respectively, can hardly be certain that they will remain compatible for 45 years, and they would hardly be marrying so young if they knew they would have no opportunity to get out of it if the marriage proved unsatisfactory. Seen in this light, the young age at marriage goes with a liberal but not an irresponsible attitude towards divorce."

Without Love . . . No Ratatouille

By SUE ARNOLD
London Observer

There is a strong flavor of Wonderland, even a dash of Groucho, in the evidence given last week to an industrial tribunal here involving Claridge's Hotel and Richard Elvidge, the 19-year-old trainee chef allegedly sacked for dishing up (among other things) substandard ratatouille.

Elvidge's dismissal prompted 112 Claridge's staff to stage a two-week strike last month.

Whatever light the case may have thrown on the proper preparation of French vegetable stew, it has left most observers bemused about the complexity of kitchen life in great hotels.

As the account of Elvidge's alleged culinary crimes was given to Mrs. Stell Hollis, the tribunal chairman — his refusal to trim the tails off roll-mops, his failure to cut carrots to size, his insistence on bisecting instead of trisecting Danish herring — onlookers might be forgiven for feeling confused.

What ultimate authority decides whether to trim or not to trim a roll-mop? Escoffier? Elizabeth David? Clement Freud?

Over at the Dorchester Hotel Anton Mosimann, chef de cuisine, who has been following the case with emotion, declared simply that to cook is to love. "Without love," said Mosimann, struggling to keep his voice steady, "there can be no cuisine."

One glance at a dish of 20 grilled entrecotes Berbaise was sufficient to tell him whether the chef who prepared it was happy in his work. How? "By the regularity of the grilling marks on the meat, by the attitude of the garnish. It is a gut feeling."

Mosimann, reputed to be one of the world's top ten chefs, believes that good staff relations are of paramount importance. He could be right. In a kitchen the size of the Dorchester's with 120 people struggling to dish up petits poussins citrones aux fines herbes avec pommes allumettes for a banquet of 800, it is essential, he says, to establish a rapport with all his staff from the sous chef to the pot-washers.

"Every mornig at nine sharp, I walk about the kitchen. I sniff the air. I shake hands with all my chefs. I say 'Good morning, Henry' (if that is his name), 'how is it going?' and if he seems unhappy then I move him from the roasting to the grilling."

As for there being a final arbiter on culinary propriety, Mosimann said there was only one basic system which every chef from Tokyo to Toronto followed. Presentation and seasoning were a matter of personal taste. He, for instance, eschewed garlic because diners often went on to a dance. But if a young commis (apprentice) suggested a new method of serving a dish, like leaving the tails on roll-mops, he would certainly give the lad a chance.

Away from the heat and pressure of the West End in the relative sanity of Westminster College Catering School in Battersea (where Mrs. Audrey Callaghan, the Prime Minister's wife, graduated in domestic science) Michael Hollingsworth, who teaches all forms of industrial catering, bemoaned the passing of the old disciplinarian head chef.

Hollingsworth worked for 10 years in the Claridge's kitchen at a time when staff could be fired at a minute's notice. "It was run like an army division," said Hollingsworth. "Short hair, punctuality, respect, rules. If M. Georges told you your goujons wanted thinning, you thinned your goujons. No messing."

Bird in the Park Ends a Mystery

Thanks to a nondescript little bird I saw a couple of weeks ago, away up in a far corner of Uplands Park, a question that has been troubling me for far too long has been answered.

The question first came up years ago, when I was just starting out in the birding game. Those were the days when most of the birds that passed my way did so without receiving a name. Among those early unidentified flying objects was a troop of little greyish-greenish jobs known collectively as the flycatchers. Many times, in those early days, I almost turned to another hobby after a frustrating attempt to identify one of these little fellows.

Well, gradually, over the years the flycatchers began to sort themselves out. I soon got to know the common one of the prairie aspen groves — the Least Flycatcher — by its explosive call — "chebeck". Another, then known as Traill's Flycatcher but now split into two species — the Willow and Alder Flycatchers — also fell to me through its song. And there were others, the most recent being the Western Flycatcher which came my way when I moved out to the coast.

* * *

Those were the victories; there were defeats too. I never did sort out the little Yellow-bellied Flycatcher of the spruce forest, and Hammond's and Wright's Flycatchers of the west are still a mystery to me.

The problem with this bunch is that they're look-a-likes, so much so that often the only sure way to tell them apart is by their voices.

Which brings me to the Eastern and Western Wood Pewees. These are both smallish flycatchers; greyish-green too but with enough solid field marks to make them recognizable as wood pewees and therefore separable from the rest of the little flycatchers. But separating them from other flycatchers is one thing; separating them from each other is something else.

As their names imply, the wood pewees split the continent neatly between them. Except for Manitoba, where their ranges overlap, they are quite discreet. A birder seeing a wood pewee in Ontario, even without hearing the bird, could be reasonably sure it was an Eastern Wood Pewee. The same goes for British Columbia and Western Wood Pewees.

But remember, I got my start in birding in Manitoba and that's where the two pewees are supposed to occur. Fortunately, there was a way to separate the two wood pewees — their voices. According to "the book", Eastern Wood Pewees gave forth with a clear, whistled "pee-a-wee"; Western Wood Pewees, with a fuzzy nasal, "peeeer."

So far things seem quite clear. Or do they? Not to my way of hearing. The trouble was, back in Manitoba, I used to think I could hear wood pewees with fuzzy, nasal, voices — but they always sang "pee-a-wee." The place was full of the regular, whistled pee-a-wees, but it was those pee-a-wees that sounded a little different that got me.

I suspected I was hearing Western Wood Pewees but could never be sure and, since Easterns were supposed to outnumber Westerns by a wide margin, the challenge of recognizing a Western Wood Pewee continued to be just that — a challenge.

Then I moved to British Columbia, where, among other things, I hoped to answer my pewee question. Well, it took a little longer than expected.

* * *

Last fall several pewees were pointed out to me by Ron Satterfield and Vic Goodwill. They were pewees alright, of that there was no doubt. And, being on Vancouver Island, there was little doubt that they were Western Wood Pewees, but they weren't calling, and the answer to my question depended on hearing them.

And now, at last, we arrrive in Uplands Park and turn to a bird whose brief, and infrequently uttered call — which I was sure I'd never heard before — caught my attention. The call could only be described as "peeer", with a distinctly nasal quality.

Suddenly a little bell, way back in my memory, began to ring. When I found my caller, high in a cottonwood, and saw his grey-green body, wing bars, and eye rings, I knew he was a pewee alright and a Western Pewee at that. More importantly, I realized that his nasal peeer was a call I'd never heard before. Thus was the question settled of whether Western Wood Pewees had ever been part of my Manitoba days.

"upstairs, downstairs all around the house," it's . . .

Announcing 1980 Olympic Coins
SERIES I GEOGRAPHIC

A unique opportunity to increase the value of your Olympic Collection

Series I Geographic (two 10 Rouble Coins and four 5 Rouble Coins) in Brilliant Uncirculated quality is now available at select coin dealers.

The 1980 Olympic Coins are of unusual interest to collectors because:

- These Coins commemorate the first Olympics ever held in the Soviet Union.
- They are the first silver Rouble Coins minted in over half a century.
- They are legal tender and guaranteed for their full face value in the Soviet Union by the Government of the USSR, as authorized in accordance with an act of the Government, the Ministry of Finance, and the State Bank of the USSR.
- They will be issued in such limited quantity that only a fraction of 1976 Canadian Olympic Coin collectors will be able to own them.

An extremely limited issue

The total number of the first Series of solid silver 1980 Olympic Coins minted—the first silver Rouble Coins minted in over half a century—will be strictly limited to only 450,000. 100,000 will be reserved for distribution within the Soviet Union and other related Socialist countries—leaving a total of only 350,000 for the rest of the world.

This is by far the most limited issue of individual Olympic Coins minted since the beginning of the modern Olympic Games. For example, the 1976 Montreal minting was 650,000 to 1,480,000, depending on the Series issued. The 1952 Helsinki minting was 600,000. The 1964 Innsbruck minting was 2,900,000.

The Coins in Series I—two 10 Rouble Coins and four 5 Rouble Coins—depict cities where the Olympic events will take place. On one of the 10 Rouble Coins is a map of the Soviet Union. On the other, scenes of Moscow. The 5 Rouble Coins depict scenes of Leningrad, Tallinn, Minsk and Kiev.

Alcan Upgrading Kitimat Smelter

KITIMAT (CP) — Alcan Smelters and Chemicals Ltd. announced today that it will spend $6 million during 1978 and 1979 on a trial upgrading of its 24-year-old smelter here.

Alcan said in a news release that two Japanese companies will help upgrade the facility.

Under the agreements with the companies a major technology purchase is being made from Sumitomo Aluminium Smelting Co. Ltd. of Osaka. Nippon Light Metal Co. Ltd. (NKK), an Alcan affiliate based in Tokyo, is providing supportive technology, the company said.

Alcan said it expects the combined technologies to improve smelter efficiency and internal working conditions and reduce emissions to the environment.

Twenty-five of the smelter's 900 electrolytic cells will be converted during the next year to determine its feasibility.

The company will then convert an entire potroom (about 70 cells) to fully demonstrate the new system, Alcan said.

W. J. Rich, works manager at Kitimat, said the principal goal regarding working conditions is a significant reduction in tar fume emissions in production areas.

"Some workers are now required to wear protective masks to meet allowable exposure levels," he said.

"This has always been an unacceptable solution for the long term. We expect the new technologies will allow us to meet the require levels without our employees having to wear masks."

External fluoride emissions will also be significantly reduced, Alcan said. At present, C levels of the B.C. Pollution Control Branch are being met at the smelter, as required by permit but in future, levels could be required as a minimum.

The technical changes required to achieve the energy efficiencies are also expected to reduce consumption of raw materials and increase plant productivity, Alcan said.

NON-UNION UPSWING

KELOWNA (CP) — Construction work is increasingly going to non-union contractors because union practices are proving too costly and unproductive in the present difficult economic climate, said Henry De Puyjalon, president of the Canadian Construction Association.

De Puyjalon told a meeting of the association here Thursday that use of non-union contractors will increase throughout Canada.

He said the unemployment picture in the construction industry is horrendous. About 200,000 of Canada's 650,000 construction workers were collecting unemployment insurance at the end of March, De Puyjalon said.

Rogers Denies Sex Charge

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Raymond Rodgers, charged with having sexual intercourse with a female under 14, testified in county court Thursday that he had never had intercourse with the girl, but had viewed her as a possible sexual partner had she been old enough.

Rodgers, 43, said the girl, now 16, was physically a mature woman at 13, but that he befriended her and her family in 1975 because his own wife and children had left him and he "had a need for a family-type relationship."

The girl lived with her mother and two brothers, one older and one younger than herself.

Rodgers said that, while he acted like a father to the younger boy, he treated the girl as an equal and confidante.

He said the relationship with the family broke off in 1976 because the mother told her children what Rodgers had said about vandalism committed by the older brother, who had been drinking. He said the children felt betrayed by him as a result.

He accused the RCMP of intimidating the girl to give fabricated evidence against him. He said the charge against him is part of a politically-motivated RCMP campaign to destroy him professionally and personally.

Rodgers said he had written five books, one called Sex and the Law in Canada, and more than 60 articles for a variety of publications, including an article for Saturday Night magazine which was critical of the RCMP.

Also, as a municipal election candidate, he had advocated amalgamation of the Abbotsford and Matsqui police departments by getting rid of the RCMP detachment.

"This charge would never have been manufactured and fabricated if I had not been politically active," he said.

The trial continues.

GOOD NEWS FOR TOWBOATS

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two Vancouver-based towboat companies have received a reprieve from federal transport minister Otto Lang on restrictive regulations imposed by the Canadian Transport Commission (CTC). But for one of them, the good news may be too late.

The CTC commission sought early this year to amend the operating licences of Lindberg Transport Ltd., which is partially owned by RivTow Straits Ltd., of Vancouver, and Arctic Transportation Ltd., which is a sister company of Seaspan International Ltd., of Vancouver.

Both Lindberg and Arctic Transportation operate seasonally in the Mackenzie River watershed.

Both Lindberg and Arctic Transportation sought annual renewal last winter of licences permitting them to range anywhere on the Mackenzie and tributary waterways, carrying traffic of their choice. But the CTC sought to restrict their licences so that they could only serve companies exploring for or exploiting gas or oil.

Harold Cooper, vice president and general manager of Arctic Transportation, said the news was welcome. "We will be starting operations this weekend, so it's not come too soon."

Cecil Cosulich, president of RivTow, said: "We are happy that the minister has taken a more enlightened view, though I don't know what good it will do.

BCFP Fined for Oil Spill

SECHELT (CP) — Canadian Forest Products Ltd. was fined $10,000 in provincial court Thursday for permitting the deposit of oil in waters frequented by fish.

The company was charged under the recently-amended federal Fisheries Act, after an oil spill last Sept. 14 at its Port Melon pulp mill on Howe Sound.

The court found that 1,000 gallons of heavy bunker oil accidentally leaked through a ruptured pipe while being pumped from storage tankers to boilers, and then escaped into Howe Sound through an open sewage outfall.

Judge J. S. P. Johnson said, in a 14-page written judgment, that when the crew discovered the leak, the oil line was shut down and immediate action was taken to prevent further discharge of the oil into the sewage outlet.

However, company officials did not realize the oil had leaked into the open water until early the following day, when a large oil slick was seen stretching four kilometres down Howe Sound from the mill.

Planets, Moon Line Up for Sky Show

A rare chance to view some of the brightest astral objects in the sky comes this month with the close conjunction of four bodies plus the crescent moon.

Starting this weekend and for about three weeks observers of the western sky will see Venus — the evening star and most westerly — then Mars, Jupiter and Saturn in that order, mostly low in the west each day after sunset.

A spokesman for Dominion Astrophysical Observatory said for this period the four bodies are gathered along the ecliptic, the plane of the earth's movement around the sun. Although they are really far from each other, they seem to converge because they enter into a similar line-of-sight from earth.

Venus is visible for about two hours after sunset; Mars, well up in the southwest and distinctively an orange-red color, lasts for about four hours; Jupiter, bright yellow and lowest in the west, is good for about 1½ hours, and Saturn, the faintest and closest to Mars, is yellow. Venus will be visible throughout the month.

In addition, between the June 8 and 14, the crescent moon will be nearby, showing its first quarter sickle.

Small telescopes with wide fields of vision will be able to bring Mars and Saturn closer in a single image.

The phenomenon should be visible from any point on earth.

Disclosure To Be Tried

The consumer and corporate affairs ministry and the real estate industry will conduct a pilot project in Victoria and North Vancouver requiring vendors selling their homes to fill out and sign a disclosure statement, Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Rafe Mair said Friday.

Mair said during taping of the television program Capital Comment that the procedure would act as a listing exercise to provide potential buyers with information on the house.

He said that the vendor will have to describe his house "with some particularity so that a person in Halifax, who wants to compare houses through the computer back there will now be able to know what that house is like and the vendor will be stuck with his answers."

Mair said the procedure would not stop people from lying, "but it is going to put anybody who is selling a house on the spot."

"I think it will be quite a step forward, and if it works, I am assured by the real estate people that on a voluntary basis they'll use it right across the province," he said.

The program should start immediately, he said.

Saanich Fireman Heads B.C. Group

It is the second time a firefighter from Vancouver Island has been elected to the top position.

The association, which represents 2,765 firefighters from throughout the province, passed a number of resolutions at its three-day meeting. One called for greater liasion with the Worker's Compensation Board and a voice in the formulation of the proposed new provincial Fire Act.

In an interview Erskine said an executive committee will be formed to work with the WCB's industrial health and safety committee to improve safety standards for firefighter clothing and equipment.

The firefighters are concerned about the lack of any facility for testing safety harnesses on the back of fire trucks, he said. In addition they feel some of the clothing they wear fighting fires isn't fire-resistant enough.

They also would like their departments to look at a new safety helmet which gives firefighters better protection.

Erskine said the association will make its views known to the government on the kind of training standards that should be set if and when the province moves to establish a fire college.

The association agreed to allow departments the option of supporting a secondary charity — local burn units — provided it didn't detract from the principal charity firemen have supported for years in B.C., the fight against muscular dystrophy.

BURIAL SITES LOOTED

A provincial archeologist Friday deplored the looting of Indian burial sites throughout the province.

James S. Haggarty, associate curator of archeology at the Provincial Musuem, said vandalism of burial caves on the west coast of Vancouver Island has been particularly bad in the last few years.

He said in some cases only the skulls are stolen by curio hunters. They are polished and used as ornaments.

"It's disgusting," he said. "If any one was to do the same things to a non-Indian cemetery, there would be an uproar."

He said the vandalism resulted in the Hesquiat band removing remains from 11 burial caves around Hesquiat Harbor, about 40 miles west of Tofino. They were reburied on the reserve.

"They were incensed at the looting and theft occurring at the historic burial sites of their ancestors," Haggarty said. "At first they considered sealing off the caves but decided on the latter course."

Haggarty said archeologists invited by the band to study the remains found all burial sites had been disturbed. Bones had been scattered about the caves.

Brief vacation for translators

Canadian job next

Ruth and Roger Spielman, of Wycliffe Bible Translators Inc., are enjoying a brief vacation at the Sooke home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Richardson after four months at a jungle camp in Chipas, Mexico, where they lived among the Tzeltal Indians.

At the 11 a.m. service Sunday at Trinity Presbyterian Church, Roger will speak of the need for translations and their jungle experiences. On Monday evening Ruth will give an illustrated slide talk on life in the jungle.

Both Spielmans have Masters degrees in linguistics from the University of Texas, and Ruth is also a graduate of UVic.

The aim of their work is produce written forms of language of native peoples to teach the people to read and write their own language and to have the Bible in a form they can understand.

The Spielmans have been assigned to work with an Indian group in Canada.

Perspectives

By Rev. J. A. Davidson

The young person, coming to the threshhold of adulthood finds it thrilling to decide that the time has come to make one's own decisions, to exercise one's own judgment, to set one's own pace — and without parents and teachers and other bothersome authorities looking over one's shoulder.

The young man, with the sharp blade of his new wisdom and self-appreciation, will try to cut the apron-strings — although at times he may be made to pause by the realization that purse-strings are often entwined with apron-strings. In the first thrill of freedom and independence he may fall into such intense awareness of his own importance and of his own special potential that he fails to recognize the extent of his dependence on others. And it may take him a little time to learn that in adult life it is performance that counts and not self-assessed potentialities.

A young woman can become so fascinated by her own charms and other excellences that she is in danger of developing a calculating heartlessness in her relations with other persons. The intense self-satisfaction of some young people is an awesome thing, although one can properly suspect that some of it is a cover-up for deep-seated confusion and insecurity.

But the young have no monopoly in this. We older people are afflicted with it too — although most of us have become skilled at obscuring it from the public gaze. Ingrown self-assertiveness, let run wild, is almost a guarantee of misery and distress in the long run. There is no sadder person than the man of mature years who has made an idol of what he calls "my career," an idol to which he is sometimes willing to sacrifice others, even those whom he professes to love. And no woman is more miserable than the one who has spent her prime years specializing in getting her own way and playing tunes to which she insists others dance.

Martin Luther used the expression "curved in oneself" to designate the ingrown kind of self-expression — and he suggested that that is almost a definition of what the Bible calls "sin." This kind of self-expression puts self at the centre of all things and shoves other persons to the far edges of concern. And none of us is completely free of it. The currently fashionable "assertiveness training" does, in some of its forms, encourage people in the destructive ingrownness.

But there is another kind of self-expression. In biblical thought authentic personhood is achieved not in concentration on the self and not in suppression of the self, but in outreaching, creative relations with others, relations marked by respect and compassion. Martin Buber, the modern Jewish prophet who died a few year ago, expressed a biblical insight and a profound psychological truth when he said, "All life is meeting."

Artist's conception of temple, to be ready in two years

Mormons break ground for new Seattle temple

Ground breaking services for the Seattle Temple of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints took place last Saturday in a quiet grove atop a picturesque hill in Bellevue, Wash.

President Howard L. Biddulph of the Victoria, B.C., Stake, was one of those who took part in the services at the 23-acre wooded site near Interstate 90 at the Eastgate interchange.

The temple will cost more than $10 million; $3.8 million of it was raised by the better than 200,000 Saints throughout British Columbia and the northwestern states, who will be served by it. The remainder of the funds will come from church headquarters. This temple, like all other Mormon buildings, was paid for before it was started.

The temple will be of reinforced concrete faced with white marble aggregate cast stone, with 106,000 square feet of floor space on five levels. It will be topped by a 184-foot tower and a five-foot bronze statue of the Angel Moroni. Upon its completion in two years, it will be one of 22 functioning temples around the world.

With such a price tag, why do Mormons build temples? As all members of the church know, says a spokesman, temples are built for the performance of sacred ordinances — not secret, but sacred. A temple is not a public house of worship, but is erected for special purposes. After a temple is dedicated only members of the church in good standing may enter.

Ordinations set

On June 11, St. Barnabas Day, at 5:15 p.m., Rev. John Gordon King and Rev. William John Bailey will be ordained to the Anglican priesthood in Christ Church Cathedral.

Bishop F.R. Gartell will preside at the special ordination eucharist and the preacher will be Canon Thomas Bailey.

King will assume the incumbency of Cumberland and will work at developing congregations in the many communities up and down the highway north and south of Courtney. He received his training in Oregon and at Trinity College, Toronto.

Bailey will return to Toronto to serve out his curacy at St. Timothy's Church, Agincourt, in the diocese of Toronto. He is a graduate of UBC, Keble College, Oxford, and Trinity College, Toronto, and is the son of canon and Mrs. Thomas Bailey.

ACNA has branch in Victoria

Breakaway Anglicans plan to elect bishop

The breakaway Anglican Church of North America is planning the election of a Canadian bishop, although the resignation of his U.S. counterpart has been sought by the Episcopal Church, according to the Canadian Churchman, official organ of the Anglican Church of Canada.

The conservative ACNA has a parish in Victoria, one of four congregations in Canada, named St. Athanasius, which holds services Sunday afternoons at Grace United Church, 1273 Fort. Its basic objection is to the ordination of women to the Anglican priesthood.

According to the Churchman, the Canadian members of ACNA are considering two options: To elect a Canadian suffragan or coadjutor bishop in the American diocese of the midwest, or to set up a Canadian diocese, as soon as there is a "sufficient number" of parishes and individuals.

Meanwhile, the Episcopal Church's head, Bishop John Allin, has requested the resignation of Bishop Albert Chambers, retired bishop of Springford, Ill., requesting his resignation for his part in consecrating four bishops of the ACNA at a January service in Denver.

Allin told Chambers that "by your actions in Denver you have separated yourself from this church and departed from this communion."

He said the resignation request represented "the consensus among a large majority of your brother bishops."

Chambers says he isn't sure how he will respond to the request.

The letter to Chambers acknowledges that he followed the dictates of conscience in his actions. The bishops "cannot agree with your decision," it adds, but "recognize that you did it in obedience to an imperative call, after thought and prayer.

"We accept the fact that we have not been able to influence you, and that you have in effect withdrawn from our fellowship, and we accept this with sorrow.

"We believe that you should now recognize this fact of your withdrawal. In these consecreations you have acted, not as a bishop of the Episcopal Church, but as a bishop of a separatist body.

"We believe that you should therefore resign from membership in the House of Bishops of this church, and inform the presiding bishop that you are not to be counted as a bishop or as a communicant of this church."

Chambers was a self-described pastoral leader to dissident Episcopalians even before formation of the new church.

ACNA members believe their action is valid and will be upheld by the Anglican Communion at a world convention to be held in England this summer.

Project North fighting mad

Members of Project North in Victoria are upset with political inaction and insensitivity to social and environmental issues championed by the group, and they intend to do something about it.

Says Victoria Chairperson Mrs. Mavis M. Gillie, "For some time now, members of Project North (Victoria) have become increasingly frustrated in endeavouring to make our views known and understood by members of Parliament. We have written letters, submitted briefs and had meetings with them. We have studied the impact of a gas pipeline on northern Canada, held workshops with native people, studied books and reports on the subject and believe our views are worthy of consideration."

"Yet we realize we are making little or no impression on parliamentarians, and decisions are being made without any real consideration of the views of responsible and concerned Canadians across the country."

The group intends to take action to achieve a higher profile with politicians. "We have invited Dr. Walter Young, head of the Political Science Department at UVic, and Mark Sproule-Jones of the same department to meet with us on Monday, June 5 at 8 p.m. in the crypt of St. John's Anglican Church, 1611 Quadra. They have accepted our invitation and will discuss with us how we might become more effective in the democratic process. Also with us will be Allan Clarke, instructor in the course on Native Indian studies at Camosun College. He will assist us in planning an all-candidates meeting which we hope to sponsor when the federal election is called," says Gillie.

"We urge you to turn out for this meeting. We are fortunate to be able to take advantage of the expertise these three men have to offer."

Island Baptists planning unique summer camp

Island Baptists are planning a unique family camping program this summer from July 31 through Aug. 28. Called Port Sylvan, the program will be held at Sylvan Acres, a baptist camp located two miles west of the Swartz Bay Ferry terminal on Land's End Road near Sidney.

Open Community Christian Camping is an innovative, flexible program for adults and children together. People may come for a day, two days, or a week or more, provided they pre-register. Children may be brought or sent to the camp and people may bring their own camping vehicles, although there is no hook-up. Children above eight years and teens will live in cabins with their own age-groups.

The camping program offers many options, including hiking, biking, swimming, boating, exploring the Gulf Islands, handcrafts, overnight camp-outs and much more. Port Sylvan is a true community with a place for every person, young or old. A strong emphasis will be placed on Bible study and sharing the Christian experience.

Maximum charge per day is $22.50 for a family, with single adult price $8.50 per day. For further information contact: The Registrar, Sylvan Acres Baptist Camp, Suite 515, 831 Dunsmuir Rd., Victoria, B.C., V9A 5B9.

Speaker from Zaire

Church Chronicles

Eric MacKenzie, who has spent the last 12 years in Zaire, will address meetings in Victoria Monday and Tuesday.

Monday's talk is at 8 p.m. at Emmanuel Baptist Church and Tuesday's at 10:30 a.m. at Elk Lake Baptist Church.

MacKenzie is a native of Vancouver with a BSc in agriculture from UBC and additional years of study in tropical agriculture at Florida State.

In 1958 he was appointed by Canadian Baptists to go to Angola as an agricultural missionary. When the Portuguese expelled Protestant missionaries in the early 1960s, MacKenzie and his wife Merle went to Zaire as part of an interdenominational team. They have since worked in various districts in Zaire.

week. The total number of hard core addicts in the Victoria area is estimated at 100 to 125.

Hoskins said letters have been sent to current clients of the methadone program advising them they will be allowed to continue as long as they don't abuse the program or withdraw from it. If they do either they will revoke their special status.

Cantelon said he had no knowledge of the letter and doubted it had been sent out yet to addicts attending the clinic here.

Hoskins said the ultimate aim is total abstinence but the government has a moral obligation to honor existing contracts with persons taking methadone.

He said between Oct. 1 and Dec. 31 clinics will provide methadone to any heroin user who wants it to assist him in withdrawing. Users will be able to get the drug without registration or identification.

"The three-month period of grace has nothing to do with either the new treatment plan or methadone program," he said.

"It's simply an offer we are making to any user to help him withdraw.

"If the user stays clean, then there's no way he'll be forced to come into the new program on Jan. 1."

Cantelon, however, said it was the first he had heard of the offer.

"I wish if they make these policies they'd tell the people in the field first," he said.

Hoskins said the methadone clinic, operated by the Victoria Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation Society at 733 Johnson, will be replaced with a larger facility capable of providing the fuller range of services envisaged under the compulsory treatment plan.

More staff will be hired and office hours will be extended. A site has yet to be found for the new unit, which will be an after-care and acute-care community support centre.

Hoskins said the ADC will take over the operation but DARS will continue to provide services for alcohol and other drug misuse.

Addicts will be forced to stay on the compulsory program for three years and may be subject to a six-month internment at a treatment centre at the former Island Youth Centre at Brannen Lake.

The ADC aims to get 25 per cent of the estimated 10,000 addicts in the province taking part in the program. Hoskins said that at its peak the voluntary methadone program provided treatment for only seven to eight per cent of the addicts. In the eyes of many, it has proved a failure.

While the compulsory program has come under sharp criticism from many quarters — civil liberties groups, the B.C. Bar Association and the opposition New Democratic Party — both Cantelon and his co-worker at the clinic, Annette Ripley, believe it will work, "if handled in a humane way, which we think it will."

Said Cantelon: "I think a lot of people who've been sitting on the fence, taking the drug now and then, will drop out of the picture.

"This program is really going to deglamorize the whole drug scene. There won't be as many attracted to it."

However, he added, compulsory treatment will have little impact on hard core addicts.

"I doubt if it's going to change much for them," he said.

Mike, a 37-year-old addict who has been on the methadone program in Victoria for the past five years, agrees.

"You can't take an addict off the street and force him to undergo treatment," he said. "All that will do is make him angry."

Wendy, 24, another addict receiving methadone treatment, said addicts regard the new program as a kind of Gestapo operation.

"From what I can see there's going to be a lot of ducking and dodging. Addicts will just keep moving. I've heard some people saying they'll be leaving the province. I haven't heard too many say they'll stop."

"It's ridiculous," said Mike who has been an addict more than 20 years. "I don't think the government is going about this in the right way. You just can't force an addict to stop. He has to be ready to do it. I've been on the scene long enough to know that."

ver Island, but this is a poor year there with the catch valued at less than $500,000.

Sid Dickens, president of the Co-operative Fishermen's Guild in Prince Rupert said closure of the Alaska halibut fishery would mean a loss of at least two-thirds of its production.

The annual tuna run begins off B.C. in July, and in past years the catch has been valued between $500,000 and $15 million. "Can the U.S. afford to take a chance that this won't be a good tuna season," asked one unidentified American official.

UFAWU president Jack Nicol said fishermen here won't take vigilante action if they catch Americans fishing in Canadian waters.

A U.S. Marine Fisheries Service spokesman said 33 B.C. boats were in Washington state waters when the last check was made Thursday.

An official of the U.S. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in Washington said 30 to 40 U.S. vessels are in West Coast Canadian waters now.

Who else would bring you a car that does all this and doesn't use gasoline?

Here are a few hints.

The same people that some 25 odd years ago brought out a small car that stood the automotive world on its ear.

The same people that revolutionized the industry just a few years ago with the introduction of the most highly acclaimed and advanced auto of the last decade.

Yup, you guessed it. Who else but Volkswagen?

First the Beetle, then the Rabbit, and now the amazing VW Rabbit with an optional diesel engine.

And while there's nothing terribly new about the concept of a diesel powered passenger car, there are some things that are quite remarkable about the Rabbit Diesel.

First, it does everything that diesels are famous for. Like delivering spectacular fuel economy. (Transport Canada has rated the Rabbit Diesel as the very best car you can buy in the country for fuel economy.)

And since the diesel engine doesn't have a carburetor, or spark plugs, or a distributor, or points, or condenser, it never needs a major tune-up. Ever.

But on top of that, the Rabbit Diesel does something that diesels are famous for not being able to do. Like go from 0 to 80 km/h in a mere 11.5 seconds. In fact, the Rabbit Diesel has set 31 world records for 1500 cc diesels.

The price is very un-diesel-like, too. (Until the Rabbit Diesel came along, diesel passenger cars were a very expensive proposition.)

And then on top of all that, since the Rabbit Diesel is, after all, still a VW Rabbit it does all the things that a Rabbit is famous for. So you get sports car handling, rack and pinion steering, a unique "independent stabilizer rear axle", more than enough room to seat four adults comfortably, and more trunk space than a Cadillac Seville. Not to mention innovative standard safety features, some of which are not even available on most other cars as options.

This hard-to-believe car is now available at the only place you'd expect to find this kind of car. Your nearest Volkswagen dealership.

Where else?

The Rabbit Diesel.
Don't settle for less.

*Based on Transport Canada approved test methods. Fuel consumption will vary depending on how and where you drive, optional equipment and condition of your car. Based on EPA Interior Volume Index 1978.

The Old Master Donkey Builder Cuts into History

Breezed out to the Sooke Region Museum the other day.

There I met a real old-timer, passing on some of his know-how to the youngsters, and a woman whose dream has come true a lot sooner than she expected.

In the shade of the trees beside the museum building, 83-year-old Swedish-born Olof Frederickson was hacking away with his axe and overseeing students (employed through the Young Canada Works program) as they shaped the huge skids that will hold the old steam donkey they are rebuilding.

A master donkey builder in the early days of logging in the Sooke district, Olof remembers with affection constructing the steam donkeys that were used to haul the big logs.

"They're all gas or diesel now," Olof, who has lived in the Sooke region since 1926, says a little sadly.

It was a year ago that I first went out to watch a group of modern-day pioneers putting up the log building that was to house their museum. They were hurrying to get it finished to open by July 2 and I remember Elida Peers sounding a little apologetic.

"When we open, of course, it won't be a perfected museum at that stage," she had explained back then. "It will be some years before we're good . . ."

"Well, it's less than a year since the Lions Club handed over the building to the Sooke Region Historical Society," points out society president Ray Vowles. "And we're good already — or at least we like to think we are."

★ ★ ★

And, when you wander through the museum and see the exhibits and the hours of caring and work that must have gone into them, you realize he knows what he's talking about. They are good.

Reopened recently after being closed during the winter to allow more exhibits to be worked in, the museum is on the corner just over the bridge where you make that right-hand turn each summer to go to All-Sooke Day. It operates from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily during the summer.

In the first few months from July 2 to November when it was closed, more than 4,000 people went through the museum and Elida Peers, museum director and archivist, expects a lot more than that this summer.

Displays include those on the natural history of the area, farming, logging, fishing, as well as the clothing and utensils used by the early pioneers, and an Indian display.

There's a huge collection of photographs from the old days, paintings by artists of the district and a large scrapbook you can look through.

Upstairs in the attic of the log building there's a crude little theatre where an exceptionally well-produced slide show on Sooke's history is shown three times (11 a.m., 1:30 and 3:30 p.m.) daily. There is no admittance charge — just a silver collection box — and in all it's a professional effort.

★ ★ ★

And Elida says a lot of the praise must go to officials at the Provincial Museum for their help, and to the incredibly community-minded people of Sooke.

"Right from the start we've had co-operation from firms, like the logging companies that donated the logs for the building and for the donkey skids and from individuals who have given us many of the artifacts and their time," Elida says.

"At least 500 people have given some kind of assistance on this project and I'd say that's a conservative estimate," she adds. "And their interest has never waned. Just last week I sent out 60 thank-you letters to people who helped get the displays ready in time for the reopening."

There are many more tales to tell of the lengths some people have gone to get interesting things to give to the museum. Of local families like the one that was offered $1,500 for an antique phonograph but decided to give it to the museum instead.

A true example of community spirit.

One nice day, why not pop out and have a look over it. And take in the 40-minute slide show. It's well worth it.

You'll probably wish your community had such a museum. Even maybe that you lived in such a community . . .

Tremor Forerunner Of a Real Biggie?

An earth tremor that struck northern Vancouver Island Friday could be a prelude to a major earthquake in the area in the next decade, Dr. Robin Riddihough of the Pacific Geoscience Centre at Patricia Bay said.

Riddihough said the quake was caused by a small land plate, on which Vancouver Island sits, being forced under the North American continent by a land plate under the Pacific Ocean.

The centre of the quake, which measured 5.1 on the Richter scale, was in the Zeballos area and the tremor was felt in Port Hardy, Port Alice, Alert Bay and Port McNeill. It hit at 1:45 p.m. and lasted about three seconds. There were no reports of damage or injury.

"It was a flash type of thing," an RCMP officer in Port Hardy said. "Dishes shook and windows rattled. It wasn't too serious."

Riddihough said the same geological formation is expected to prompt a major earthquake of about seven on the Richter scale sometime in the next 10 years. A reading of six is considered the line between major and minor damage, he said.

He said experts don't expect a loss of life if there is a major quake in the area. Deaths occur, he said, because of poor building construction such as happened recently in Central American.

Riddihough said Vancouver Island sits on a tectonic plate, about 200 kilometres wide. It stretches from the Queen Charlotte Islands to California and sits between the Pacific plate and the America plate, both of which measure about 6,000 kilometres wide.

"The Juan de Fuca plate (on which Vancouver Island sits) is being forced underneath the America plate by the Pacific plate," he said, with the resulting pressure sparking the quake.

The last major quake struck eastern Vancouver Island in 1946 and measured 7.3 on the Richter scale, he said. It was centred in Courtenay.

"It caused a fair amount of damage — a chimney fell through the roof of a local school and a facade fell off a store front," he said.

Wosk Burned By City Hall

Vancouver businessman Ben Wosk said here Friday his plans for expansion and investment here are being frustrated by city hall bureaucracy.

Wosk's Ltd., about to open its 14th B.C. furniture and appliance store on Store Street, is also in the accommodation and convention business and has Victoria in mind for a new hotel.

Wosk said he had had discouraging response when outlining his prospective operations in the capital, but within a few days he was going back to city hall "to see if I can talk sense to them."

He cited quibbling about the color of tiles on the front of the new store as one of the difficulties, and the location of a store building site at Finlayson and Burnside.

"Maybe I'm bitter, but I think there are so many departments and so on that can say 'no', and there isn't one department that says, 'You have a problem. Let's straighten it out. Let's see what we can do.'"

Instead, he said he is likely to encounter the attitude: "'Wosk, you are guilty; you're trying to put something over.'"

Wosk said as a free enterpriser 47 years in the Lower Mainland he believed local councils should do their best to bring business, industry and employment to a city. He disagreed that Canadians do not want to take chances and risk capital on ventures.

Whether there are further Wosk undertakings in Victoria, including a new store, depends on the tenor of his talks within the next few days, he said. He does plan to expand retail operations to other parts of Vancouver Island, such as Nanaimo, and into Alberta.

The store opening here next Thursday in the former wholesale meat warehouse at Store and Herald will employ about 20 full-time staff, said Wosk vice-president Peter Weichel. He said it was a timely expansion for Wosk's volume operation because some of its "weaker sister" competitors had gone out of business here.

Firemen Talking With City

The contract dispute beteween the Victoria Firefighters Union and the city moved a step closer to solution during a meeting Friday with mediator Clark Gilmour, union president Richard Brideson said today.

"There were reports that negotiations had broken down," he said. "But this was not so. We consider it the first sign of serious negotiations."

The union and city representative at the meeting had followed the mediator's instructions in "costing out" the union's demands which were supposed to have equalled a package of six per cent, he said.

Brideson said the joint examination showed the actual wage package figure to be 5.98 per cent.

He said the union is holding its demands to 5.98 per cent in keeping with anti-inflation guidelines.

A counter offer of 5.1 was made by Carl Anshelm, chief negotiator for the the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association, but this was not accepted, he said.

"I guess that's where the suggestion came in that talks had broken down," Brideson said.

He said that next Thursday and Friday has been set aside by the mediator for further talks.

City Defeats Province In Business Tax Fight

The provincial government must pay municipal business tax and licence fees for Crown corporations and government-owned commercial companies, a Victoria county court judge ruled Friday.

The ruling could have wide implications for all B.C. municipalities.

Victoria city solicitor Jakob de Villiers said today municipalities now may be able to collect business taxes from other government operations like liquor stores and the B.C. Buildings Corporation.

He said he will prepare a report for city council after he has studied the incorporating statutes of each Crown corporation.

"Each case varies," he said. "For example, we could never collect business tax and licence fees from B.C. Hydro because they are specifically exempt through statute."

De Villiers said he will wait to see if Friday's decision is appealed by the province before proceeding with his study.

The city of Victoria took the government to court after it refused to pay $548 business tax on 932 Yates, owned by the provincial government and operated as a parking lot.

Judge Montague Drake, in a written decision, said the government is capable of carrying on resident business within the Municipal Act, the government is not exempt from paying business tax, the government is capable of carrying on businesses mentioned in the 1919 City of Victoria Act and it is not exempt from paying licence fees.

Drake concurred with an earlier definition of business as "anything which occupies the time and attention and labor of a man for the purpose of profit."

For Victoria, de Villiers argued that the provincial government can do anything unless expressly forbidden by statute and no prohibition exists to prevent the province from carrying on business.

The government's lawyer, H.L. Henderson, argued that the province is incapable in law of engaging in business for profit or gain.

But Drake said what would mean business as he has defined it, when carried on by a person, "undergoes a mysterious metamorphosis when carried on by the Sovereign simply because, in law, the Sovereign can no more sully her hands with trade than she can do no wrong.

"The maxim that the Sovereign can do no wrong, a notion of the greatest utility in constitutional and administrative law, proves on examination to be as false a fiction as ever existed. Our constitution would never have developed at all were it not for the firm conviction of generations of legislators, judges and rebels that, far from being incapable of doing wrong, the Sovereign would inevitably do so at every opportunity unless rigidly controlled.

"I mention this maxim only to support my opinion that our constitution consists, in its essentials, of a series of constraints upon executive power. It is a prohibitory constitution.

"And it follows that the Sovereign is free to do anything that pleases her, unless prevented by law. Under such statutes as the Crown Proceedings Act, 1974, the Sovereign can now be sued in her own courts for the tortious acts of her servants.

"Why not, then, taxed for their commercial activities? In my view, in a full-blown, burgess-controlled, constitutional monarchy such as prevails in this country, the Crown is capable of doing anything that is not actually prohibited by positive law."

City Wooing The Japanese

Japan hardly knows Victoria exists as far as the tourist industry is concerned, but this will soon change, says Visitors Information Centre president Ted Balderson.

The problem, he said, is Tokyo visitors to British Columbia are thinking in terms of Vancouver, which is the landing terminal for international flights.

Many of them have never heard of Victoria until after they get here.

But a Japanese television crew came to Victoria to do a special on Lester Pearson College of the Pacific and was so enamored of the area it decided to shoot a half-hour TV special on the attractions of Victoria.

This program will be shown soon on Japan's national TV network.

Balderson said this prime coverage should be followed up by the department of travel with advertising in the Japanese market that includes Vancouver Island as well as Vancouver.

He said he understands the department of travel is planning a vigorous promotion campaign in Japan — and Victoria should be specifically mentioned.

Balderson was commenting on a report out of Vancouver that there is a boom under way in Japanese tour business.

Place Names Honor War Dead

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Hundreds of men and women killed in the Second World War have been memorialized by having B.C. mountains, creeks and lakes named after them.

But in the majority of cases the families have never been notified.

Don Pearson, of the provincial mapping and surveying branch, says the government used to advise the families but hasn't since the early 1960s because of difficulty tracking down next-of-kin.

Although the practice of naming unnamed geographical features after war dead has fallen off in the '70s, Pearson says he has resorted to the B.C. War Casualties List about 100 times since he was appointed head of the naming section six years ago.

None of those families was ever told.

He says he turns to the list when there is no local history that would produce an appropriate name and when no other name is proposed.

In the past he has tried to key names of the war dead to the same general area the servicemen came from.

But that isn't possible any more because the lists of names from once-sparsely populated interior areas — which still abound with unnamed features — have already been used up.

For example, all 10 war casualties from Prince George have been commemorated by having mountains in the area named after them. But relatively few names have been drawn from casualties lists of larger centres such as Vancouver or Victoria.

Pearson says he regularly gets requests from people to use the name of someone who has died in naming new geographic features, and always tries to oblige. He hesitates, however, when it comes to common surnames.

"The Smiths and Jones are out of luck," he says. "There are just too many of them around."

It's a different story for names such as Robert Perkins and David Vanstone, of Campbell River, who were killed in the Second World War. They have mountains named after them. Victoria-raised John Benton, killed in action on July 11, 1943, is now memorialized by Benton Peak. And William Davidson and Herbert Paige, both of Esquimalt, have been commemorated, too. Davidson's name has been given to a mountain in Alberta where he came from and Paige's to a channel in the Gulf Islands.

Pearson isn't the only one who uses the casualties list. Hydrographic survey crews refer to it for naming coastal features. In a survey of Otter Passage to McKay Reach, 13 names were plucked from the list of Victoria airmen who lost their lives in the war. They included Edward Blenkinsop, Arthur Buckle, Edward Corbett, Walter Fernyhough, Colin Finlayson, Edmond Fleishman, Cecil Hulke, Harvey Minnis, Charles Mitchell, Edward Taylor, Richard Taylor, Thomas Waterman and Edwin Williams.

The names, however, constitute only a tiny fraction of the estimated 40,000 place names in the province and are even less than the 400 to 500 new names added to the provincial geographical names list each year.

While Pearson makes the selection, the name isn't official until it is approved by Environment Minister Jim Nielsen, Pearson's boss. In other provinces, notably Quebec and Ontario, the selection is by a separate naming commission established by statute.

Once the name is approved it is gazetted by the Canadian Permanent Committee of Geographical Names, of which Pearson is B.C.'s lone member.

The committee published a complete listing last in 1966. Names added since then are included in yearly supplements.

Brutal Battles Seem Likely

BUENOS AIRES (Reuter) — Predictions that the 1978 World Cup soccer finals could degenerate into a series of brutal confrontations appeared all the more likely after two Hungarian players were ejected Friday.

Andras Torocsik and Tibor Nyilasi, two of Hungary's most gifted attacking players, were both ordered off in the last two minutes of a Group 1 match with Argentina which the host country won 2-1.

Hungarian manager Lajos Baroti later, apologized for his team's rough play and said the two expelled players had "lost control of themselves because of their youth."

But the fact remained that in the heat of the battle and with every country striving its utmost to carry off the ultimate prize, the risk of such explosive incidents is a constant threat to hopes that the tournament can be kept free of violence.

The sending off of the two Hungarians marred an otherwise thrilling match, the result of which brought wild celebration throughout Argentina.

The win put Argentina in a tie for the Group 1 leadership with Italy, which beat France 2-1.

In Friday's other game, Tunisia scored a surprise 3-1 upset over Mexico to take the lead in Group 2.

Kakaroly Csapo silenced the crowd of 80,000 in the River Plate Stadium when he shot Hungary into the lead after 10 minutes but Leopoldo Luque scored for Argentina four minutes later.

After that, the teams battled for more than an hour before substitute Daniel Bertoni fired Argentina's winner in the 84th minute.

Torocsik and Nyilasi were both cautioned early in the game, leaving Portuguese referee Antonio Garrido no choice but to send them off when they committed bad fouls as the Hungarians desperately sought a late equalizer.

Garrido also cautioned Argentine captain Daniel Passarella for a vicious high tackle and there was more than a suspicion that the home players were being deliberately provocative although managep Cesar Menotti later praised his team for its "iron discipline."

Part of the problem is that Group 1 has no weaklings and all four teams know that it is a life-and-death struggle in which every match is vital.

In the other Group 1 encounter, Italy showed surprising qualities of resilience to recover from a first-minute goal and beat France 2-1.

Bernard Lacombe headed France into the lead in 30 seconds, but Paolo Rossi (29 minutes) and substitute Renato Zaccarelli (54 minutes) hit the goals that carried Italy to victory.

Both France and Hungary know they must win their two remaining games to stay in the competition, but it already looks as though Italy, twice winner of the Cup, and Argentina, which has never won, is on its way into the last eight.

Tunisia pulled off the first shock of the tournament, msking light of its 1,000-to-one rating to upset Mexico.

Tunisia won after conceding the first goal, a penalty on the stroke of halftime. Three second-half goals sank the Mexicans and put Tunisia at the top of the group, ahead of Poland and West Germany, who played a scoreless draw in the opening match on Thursday.

Competition started today in Groups 3 and 4 with Brazil, the only country to win the cup three times and the favorite to score a fourth success this time, opening its challenge against Sweden in the seaside resort of Mar Del Plata.

Much attention was also focussed on another Group 4 encounter, between Scotland and Peru in Cordoba.

Tour Rookies Take Charge

TORONTO (CP) — Even with rookie sensation Nancy Lopez absent from the field, the kiddie corps of the Ladies Professional Golf Association has once again taken the lead in a tour event.

Heading the $100,000, 72-hole Canadian tournament after Friday's second round are Donna Horton White, a rookie on the tour, and JoAnn Dost, who is embarking on her third campaign.

White, 24, a resident of West Palm Beach, Fla., and Dost, 27, of Vienna, Fla., share the lead at six-under par 140.

The two players are one shot ahead of Beth Stone, the opening-round leader, and Mary Dwyer, both in at 139.

The six-under par figures are the best 36-hole scores that White and Dost have recorded since they joined the tour.

Dost shot the best round of the day, a six-under-par 67 over 6,265-yard St. George's course. Included in her round were eight birdies, one short of the LPGA record. White, who opened with a 71, shot four-under par 69 Friday. Included in her round were four birdies and one eagle.

However, disaster struck on the 18th tee when she pushed her shot into trees on the right and had to settle for a double-bogey six.

Four players are in a tie for third at 142: Judy Rankin, the defending champion, Kathy Martin, Kathy McMullen and Sharon Miller.

Florida's Key Swift Rookie

COURTENAY (CP) — Imports Larry Key and Bill Olds have emerged as the early candidates for starting positions in the offensive backfield of British Columbia Lions of the Canadian Football League.

Head coach Vic Rapp has eight imports in training camp competing for two positions after last season's two starters—Mike Strickland and Jim Harrison—were cast adrift. Harrison was released and Strickland retired in the face of the stiff competition.

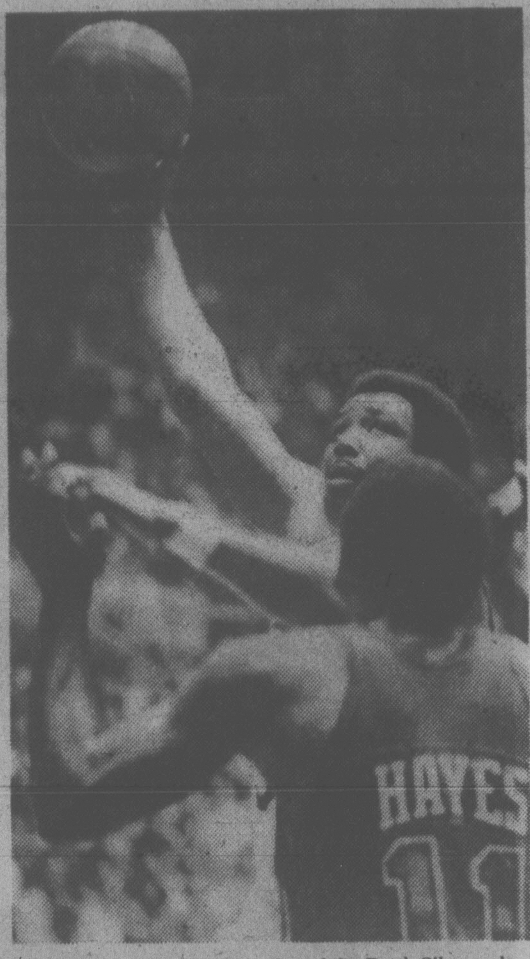
Key is a swift rookie from Florida State who was the 10th-round draft choice of Green Bay Packers of the National Football League.

Olds is a veteran of four NFL teams. He's from the University of Nebraska.

Rapp says that Key is even quicker than anticipated and Olds is a stronger blocker.

Olds is getting strong competition from Calvin Culliver, a University of Alabama graduate with tremendous speed.

Other surprises in camp, said Rapp, are offensive tackle Jim Lohmann of Texas-El Paso, linebacker Tom Schulz of Simon Fraser University, wide receivers Mike Neely of Santa Clara University and Harry Holt of Arizona State, and defensive tackle Drew Taylor of San Jose State.



HOOKING FOR TWO is Seattle's Paul Silas, who connects for two-pointer over Elvin Hayes of Washington Bullets during National Basketball Association playoff game Friday night in Seattle. Effort by Silas helped SuperSonics chalk up 98-94 victory and take 3-2 lead in best-of-seven final. (AP Wirephoto)

Girls Power Arbutus Win

Girls provided much of the power Friday at Centennial Stadium as Arbutus rolled to a 30-point triumph over runner-up Lansdowne in the Greater Victoria junior high school track and field meet.

With Karen Lightbody, who broke one record and won three events, setting the pace, Arbutus girls won 13 of 22 events to propel their school to a total of 233 points. Landowne collected 203 points and the combined St. Michael's-Norfolk House team was third at 180.

Lightbody won the junior girls' 100 meters in a record time of 12.5 seconds, scored victories in the 200 metres and long jump and helped Arbutus to a win in the sprint relay.

Leslie Grunderson of Arbutus added victories in the 80-metre hurdles and high jump. Also winner of two events (shot put and discus) was Lansdowne's Sandi Smith.

Patricia Wellman of Cedar Hill was one of the meet's standouts as she set records will winning the midget girls' 800 metres (2:07:4) and the junior girls' 1,500 metres (4:53:1).

Records in the junior boys' section were established by Glen Owen of St. Michael's in the triple jump (12.62 metres) and Mark Hicks of Oak Bay in the pole vault (3.38 metres).

In the midget boys' division, Oak Bay's Andrew Edwards took the 100 and 200, setting a record of 24.4 in the 200; Glenlyon's Robin Baird posted a record of 2:07:4 in the 800 and also won the 1,500; Alex Haddad of St. Mike's leaped a record 11.87 metres in the triple jump; David Whittaker of Oak Bay posted a new mark of 57.0 in the 400 and Oak Bay cracked the sprint relay standard with a time of 48.4.

Sonics Keeping It All 'Together'

SEATTLE (AP) — Guards Fred Brown and Dennis Johnson combined for more than half of Seattle's points. But it was a team effort that carried the SuperSonics to a 98-94 victory over Washington Bullets Friday and brought Seattle to within one game of the National Basketball Association championship.

Seattle leads the best-of-seven playoff finals 3-2 and can win the crown by beating Washington Sunday in Landover, Md. If the Bullets win that one, the seventh game of the series would be played here Wednesday.

(Sunday's game will be televised on channel 7, starting at 10:30 a.m. PDT.)

"Togetherness, that's the key to this team," said Seattle forward Paul Silas, who will be 35 next month and is the man the younger Sonics look up to.

"We were together all year long," said Silas. "We never quit, even when things were going bad. I just hope we can last one more and wrap it up."

Togetherness is something coach Lenny Wilkens has been preaching all year long.

"The key is having big people that are unselfish and willing to do whatever is necessary to win," said Wilkens. "You can contribute without scoring a lot of points, and this team is a perfect example. Everyone here contributes."

Washington coach Dick Motta was not happy with his club's performance.

"There didn't seem to be much rhythm tonight with all the offensive fouls and traveling calls," he said. "I'm not happy with tonight, but at least we split our games in Seattle and we're still alive."

It was the 22nd consecutive victory for the Sonics at the Seattle Memorial Coliseum, where they were cheered by a capacity crowd of 14,098. Washington had beaten the Sonics 120-116 in overtime Tuesday to tie the series but that game was played at the mammoth Kingdome, where the crowd was less of a factor.

Brown led all scorers with 26 points and Johnson had 24.

Washington led throughout the first quarter but Johnson kept Seattle in contention by hitting five shots in a row and scoring 12 points in the opening session, which ended with the Bullets ahead 24-23.

Seattle took command in the second quarter, running off 14 straight points to move in front 37-28 with 6:33 to go in the half. The Sonics never gave up that lead.

BLUES REHIRE PLAGER

Bowman Stays With Champs

Times News Services

Scotty Bowman has opted for happiness with a winner instead of a larger pay-cheque elsewhere and has signed a new two-year contract to stay on as coach of the National Hockey League's Montreal Canadiens, Stanley Cup winners for the last three seasons.

At the same time, St. Louis Blues, one of the NHL rivals reported very interested in prying Bowman out of the Montreal organization, settled their coaching situation by rehiring Barclay Plager.

"I guess there are some people who might say I'm crazy," Bowman said after the club announced the signing Friday. "Sure, I could have made a million bucks somewhere else, but would I be happy? I doubt it."

Apart from a three-year deal signed by Toe Blake, general manager Sam Pollock said, he couldn't recall the Canadiens ever having given a multi-year contract to another coach.

"Everybody needs a rest from negotiations," Pollock said. "We didn't want to go through it all again next year."

The signing ends another round of what has become virtually annual speculation that Bowman, 44, was ready to jump the NHL's flagship club. In recent weeks he had been reported to be considering joining New York Rangers, Colorado Rockies, Vancouver Canucks as well as St. Louis.

"I had a lot of other offers and they were very tempting," Bowman said, "but I wouldn't have the things I have here."

He said he feels he has a degree of job security with the Canadiens, although he acknowledges that he has no lifetime guarantee of the coach's position.

In St. Louis, Plager, 37, a former defenceman who revitalized the club too late during the final third of the 1977-78 season, was rehired said: "You don't have fun unless you win. We've got a pretty decent hockey club. We'll be in the playoffs."

Plager, one-time Blues captain, was named to coach the floundering team last Feb. 16 as a replacement for Leo Boivin, who resigned. He directed St. Louis to a 4-3 victory over Vancouver Canucks to start his career, then steered the club to a 9-11-6 record in its final 26 games during a bid that fell short of a Stanley Cup playoff berth.

"I think some things happened that were very encouraging," said Plager. "As a team, we weren't giving up as many goals. We played with a little more confidence. I think we'll be an aggressive hockey club."

The Blues, once the cream of the NHL's expansion crop, missed the playoffs last winter for only the second time in 11 years, finishing the season with a 20-47-13 record.

SWIM STARS MARRY

EAST BERLIN (Reuter) — East Germans Kornelia Ender and Roland Matthes, formerly two of the world's outstanding swimmers, have been married.

Networks Shun All-Star Game

CALGARY (CP) — They could play the best game of the Canadian Football League season tonight at McMahon Stadium but, aside from the expected crowd of 22,000, no one will see it.

The two major television networks—CBC and CTV—decided it was not in their best interests to televise the CFL's all-star game, which kicks off the pre-season schedule.

The contest will feature several of the top players from the Eastern Football Conference against a squad from the Western Conference in the third matchup since the All-Star game format was revised in 1976.

Perhaps the television executives were thinking back to last year when they decided not to televise this year's event. Only 7,000 fans were on hand at Toronto's CNE stadium to watch the East nip the West 20-19 in an entertaining affair.

This is the second All-Star game staged in Calgary in six years. In 1972, the home town Stampeders battled the league All-Stars under the old format which had the Grey Gup champions involved in the affair.

A crowd of 23,616 produced a profit of $76,000 that year, the most of any All-Star game held by the CFL.

Proceeds from tonight's game go to the CFL pension fund and if the expected crowd of over 22,000 appears, they could have a profit of more than $55,000 to put into the fund.

The East team will be coached by Joe Scanella of the Alouettes while the West will be handled by Hugh Campbell of Edmonton.

FIRST PINCH-HIT HOMER FOR SLUGGER

New Experience for Bench

By Associated Press

It was a week between swings for Johnny Bench but the Cincinnati slugger proved that hitting home runs is like riding a bicyle. Once you get the knack of it, you never forget.

Bench came off the bench in the bottom of the ninth inning Friday night and hit a pinch-hit home run, lifting the Reds to a 3-2 victory over Pittsburgh Pirates. The win kept the Reds 1½ games behind first-place San Francisco Giants in baseball's National League West.

Meanwhile, the Giants took a 6-5 decision in 10 innings over Montreal Expos. In other games, San Diego Padres shaded New York Mets 5-4, Philadelphia Phillies beat Los Angeles Dodgers 4-2, Houston Astros edged St. Louis Cardinals 2-1 and Chicago Cubs nipped Atlanta Braves 6-5.

In the American League, Toronto Blue Jays defeated Texas Rangers 3-1, Boston Red Sox defeated California Angels 6-1, Chicago White Sox beat Kansas City Royals 5-1, Minnesota Twins beat Detroit Tigers 4-2, New York Yankees defeated Oakland A's 3-1, Cleveland Indians beat Milwaukee Brewers 7-6 and Baltimore Orioles defeated Seattle Mariners 10-9.

Jesse Jefferson pitched a four-hitter at Texas while Roy Howell and Otto Velez hit RBI singles in Toronto's three-run fourth inning.

Butch Hobson drove in four Boston runs, including three on a homer to spoil the debut of California's new manager Jim Fregosi. "It's just one loss and we're gonna play a lot of games," Fregosi philosophized. "I would have loved to have won my first one as a manager, but things don't always happen the way you'd want them."

Bench has hit 297 home runs in his career but Friday night's game-winning shot, his 10th homer this season, was his first ever as a pinch-hitter. That's because the Cincinnati slugger is rarely out of the regular lineup.

But he's been sidelined for a week because of muscle spasms in his back suffered in a slide at home plate and the Reds have been getting along without his big bat. He took a muscle relaxant before the game against the Pirates and manager Sparky Anderson decided to give him a pinch swing for reliever Dave Tomlin in the ninth as a "one-shot thing."

Arnie's Army Smiling Again

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — By the time the second round had ended, Arnie's Army at the Kemper Open golf tournament had swelled to more than a thousand strong, but one fan in the galleries seemed to speak for all of them.

"You've been reincarnated, Arnie," the fan shouted as veteran Arnold Palmer approached the 15th green Friday. And Palmer could only smile.

He was still smiling when he reached the clubhouse in possession of a seven-under-par 137 for 36 holes in the $300,000 Professional Golfers' Association event.

"There's one way I could be more pleased, and that's to be another six strokes ahead," Palmer said after his two-under-par 70 for the second round put him one stroke ahead of Craig Stadler and defending Kemper champion Tom Weiskopf. "But on the other hand, I'm leading, and that's unusual."

It had been two years since the 48-year-old Pennsylvanian led a tournament after 36 holes. And it has been five years since Palmer's last tour victory. That was not lost on the fans as Palmer's lead began to take shape on the leader boards at Quail Hollow.

The galleries on other greens grew increasingly sparse as Palmer neared the final hole. Palmer seemed to appreciate all the attention, but said later that he was feeling more pressure than he had in quite some time.

"It's no secret that I want to do well here," Palmer said. "That adds a certain amount of additional pressure, and maybe that's good. I haven't felt that in a while."

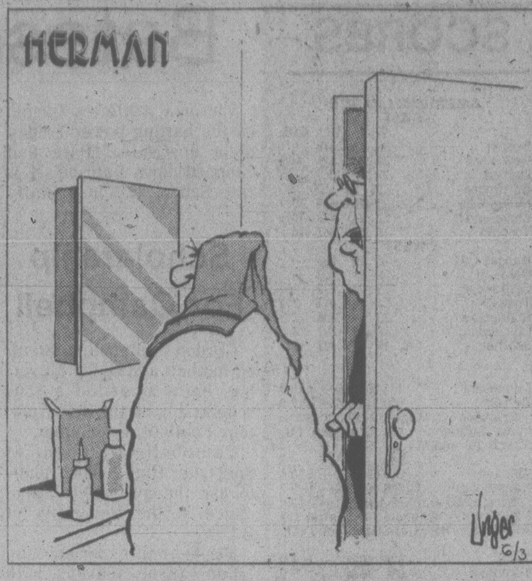
He notched three birdies and only one bogey Friday. One of the birdies, which he scored with a wedge on the 11th hole from a bunker 40 feet out, touched off an ovation that could be heard all the way to the clubhouse.

In all, 82 of the 150 entrants reached the midway point in 145 or better to survive the cut. Among those who did not were rookie Jim Nelford of Burnaby, who shot a 73 for 147, and Dave Barr of Kelowna, 78-152.



"So you dyed your hair and it turned green. You can't spend the rest of your life in this bathroom."

Big Victory for Sherk

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — After experiencing her usual difficulties with the opening holes, Canadian Cathy Sherk swept five in a row to defeat 15-year-old Laurie Rinker 3 and 1 in the finals of the North and South women's amateur golf tournament Friday.

Sherk, a 27-year-old veteran from Fonthill, Ont., began the round two down after three holes on the No. 2 course of the Pinehurst Country Club. The poised Stuart, Fla., teenager, playing with unusual composure, opened with eight successive pars, winning the second and third holes.

Sherk launched her five-hole winning streak with a birdie four on the eighth and she added the short ninth with a par when Rinker three-putted. That put Sherk ahead for the first time and the Canadian took a four-up lead with a birdie-birdie-par start on the back nine.

Sherk finished Friday with an even par for the 17 holes. Rinker was three over par.

England In Control

BIRMINGHAM, England (Reuter) — The contrasting batting talents of Clive Radley and David Gower enabled England to stay firmly in control of the first cricket test against Pakistan Friday.

At the end of a sunlit second day at the Edgbaston ground England was 256 for three—a first-innings lead of 92. Pakistan was all out for 164 in the day's second over.

England's score, was built around a painstaking innings of 97 not out by Radley. It was embellished by a dashing 58 from Gower, just 21 and playing for England for the first time.

Stock Car Drivers Challenge the Elite

Two stock car drivers — Gordie Stone and Al Miller — will be challenging the more expensive super-stocks in the annual Billy Foster super-stock championship tonight at Western Speedway.

Stone, behind the wheel of a 1966 Mustang, and Miller, who pilots a '68 Cougar, are running one-two in the stock car standings and will be making a few changes in their machines to see of they can stay close or even beat the super-stocks.

Stock cars cost roughly one-third to one-quarter of the amount it takes to build a super-stock and lack fancy suspension systems.

Jim Caudwell will be out to expand his large lead among the super-stock drivers. He now has a 305-181 margin over runner-up Larry Pollard.

Meanwhile, Roy Haslam will be continuing his campaign in the International Drivers' Trail this weekend.

The third race of the 16-race open super-stock series is scheduled for tonight at Skagit Valley, near Munroe, Wash., and Haslam will be on hand in a borrowed car.

Haslam, who won the first two races of the Trail, has borrowed a 1968 Cougar from Bob Collins because he doesn't want to risk the shaking up his own 1978 Camaro would have to take on the dirt track at Skagit.

The total prize money for the Trail is now $125,000 and some of the bonus prizes include a new car for the series champion, a trip for four to Hawaii for the second-place finisher and a trip for two to Las Vegas for the third-place driver.

Close Finishes In Senior Event

Bill Thompson and Ron Shearer collected the top awards Friday as countbacks were required to decide several first-place prizes in a Vancouver Island Seniors' Golf Association tournament at the Glen Meadows course.

Playing on his home course, Shearer captured the over-all handicap award with 91-24 — 67 and Thompson, a Victoria Golf Club member, took the over-all gross title with an eight-over-par 80 on the long layout.

Both Thompson and Shearer need countbacks to gain credit for victories. J. Bonar-Law finished in a tie with Thompson and J. Aitken of Glen Meadows matched Shearer's net 67.

Winners of gross awards in handicap divisions were Harry Donaldson of Gorge Vale, Alf Powell of Uplands, both on countbacks, Bill Grant and Sam Swetnam, both of Uplands.

There was a decisive victory in the team event for the Tom Heathfield Trophy as the Island Association defeated the visiting B.C. Seniors Association from Vancouver 732-693.

Bateson's Bombed

Victoria Athletics turned on the batting power Friday night at Central Park and chopped down Bateson's Karate School 13-2 in a Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League contest.

First-baseman Gord Rutherford smacked some long-distance shots for Athletics, hitting a home run and triple, driving in three runs and scoring three times.

Mike Wallace also drove in three runs for Athletics and clubmate Don Sutton rapped two singles and a triple.

Athletics, who cracked out 15 hits, had their most fun in the fourth inning when they chased eight runners across the plate.

Marv Carver and John Thompson played prominent roles at Heywood Avenue Park in pacing Capital Builders to a 5-0 Heywood Men's League win over Webb and Trace. Carver pitched a three-hitter and Thompson connected for three singles.

Grace Slick: Living on Edge of Vodka-stained Crevasse

By CYNTHIA GORNEY

SAN FRANCISCO — "I went out with no clothes on to check the lightning, out on a ledge . . . There was beautiful lightning going on, fantastic, and I got all the way out and it was sort of a communing with nature thing. I took all my clothes off, and I was just out there, nude, you know, out there, like an animal with no clothes, no humanity, none of the human-trappings thing, out there, and singing and carrying on, talking to the lightning." Pause for breath.

Did the lightning talk back?

"Oh, yes.

Grace Slick is 38 years old, sort of. Throat scars and pimples; the body slides both ways. The scars are from operations for singers' nodes, war medals the way she talks about them ("Harry Belafonte had nine operations and he's still going"). The pimples appear with no discretion, as pimples will. "I've got wrinkles in everything, but I still get acne."

She's a recovering alcoholic. She is corporate executive of her recording company. She is a handsome, big-eyed, black-haired woman who breaks up photo sessions by suddenly launching into a series of terrible faces. She drives very fast and sings very hard and lives on the edge of a giant, vodka-stained crevasse.

"I can't think of anything I do that's middle range," Grace Slick says, "except that I'm still alive." She is a lady rock star, an abdicated acid queen. And she is staring down middle age.

SLICK
. . . new album

If you saw the Jefferson Airplane in San Francisco 11 years ago you were probably wedged in near the back wall at Winterland, or the Avalon Ballroom, one foot numb because you sat cross-legged in that sea of frayed denim so long that by the time you realized you had to go to the bathroom your leg had dissolved somewhere around the ankle. You were squinting through a mauve haze of sweat and marijuana smoke, and way off there, way off near the horizon, silhouetted before a three-walled backdrop of Day-Glo humping amoeba, Grace Slick was singing her songs.

The songs were all over the radio, reaching an audience already giddy with fairy tales about San Francisco (which was preserving muddled brains in Lucite that year).

Slick carried the biggest music, the raucous "Somebody to Love," the wailing and deliciously drug-soaked cry of "feed your head" that climaxed "White Rabbit." The album "Surrealistic Pillow" sold a million copies. Life magazine put the Airplane on its cover. Rock's New Sound.

* * *

They are the Starship now, not the Airplane, new drum and bass and guitar players, horns on the side. The new album is called "Earth." The music is softer, if you like it; sappy if you don't. The sales are astonishing. Marty Balin, Paul Kantner and Grace Slick, rich-voiced performers with veterans' eyes, are still centre stage.

It is a 13-year history these three share, a convoluted romance that began when a nice young couple named Grace and Darby Slick went out one night in 1965 to hear some San Francisco locals named the Jefferson Airplane. "They looked like they were less than moderately talented" is how Grace Slick remembers it now, but they also looked like they were having fun, so the Slicks and Darby's brother became the Great Society, and they began singing too.

Slick had been performing most of her life anyway, if unofficially. Her mother, a former movie actress who had worked as a Marion Davies stand-in, used to sing through housework, and Grace caught the joy of that sound so early that by the time she was four years old she was strutting around in her little sunsuits, chest out, singing "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning" to anybody who would hold still for it. The Airplane's female singer got pregnant in 1966.

* * *

Grace Slick — college art major, former fashion model, uptown Palo Alto banker's child — tried out for the job. She liked them and they loved her and that, as they say, was that — the first real entrance into a world that closed in around Grace Slick and won't let her go. She took off with the drummer and that broke up. She took up with Paul Kantner, lived with him and gave birth to their child, and that broke up. She took up with Skip Johnson, the bank's 25-year-old lighting director, and married him to the sound of Hawaiian music on the island of Maui.

They are still married. They have a house north of San Francisco and a cabin cruiser. The band is still Slick's world.

The Grace Slick stories abound, and most of them are true. She appeared on a Toronto radio program and began an earnest discussion about masturbation. She walked into a hotel restaurant barefooted, and was asked to put shoes on, and responded by kicking the restaurant man in the leg. (She was discovered in the hallway later that night, still barefoot, shouting and holding three white uniformed security guards at bay with karate poses.)

She swore at interviewers, roared around San Francisco in her black Aston Martin, showed up at a White House tea for Tricia Nixon (both women attended the same private Manhattan college) in a see-through crocheted blouse and purple middy skirt, with Abbie Hoffman as her escort. "My bodyguard," she exclaimed. The White House declined to admit them.

"I don't know what middle road or moderation is," Slick says. "I have a problem with that. I like all of it, or I don't want any of it . . . I'd rather walk than go 15 miles in a car. I don't like to just piddle around with anything."

* * *

She says she bought four dresses in London for $1,000 apiece, without trying them on, and never wore them. "They're not my style." They are beautiful dresses, they hang in her closet and now and then she opens the closet door just to look at them. "I don't have a checking account, because — I tried it three times — I got to L.A. and spent like $10,000, but I won't go again for a year . . . I'd go to L.A. and go berserk all day long, buying stuff, and then the bank would call me up and say, 'Someone's been signing your name to cheques in L.A.' I said, 'No, that's me.' They said, 'Well, we cancelled them all because we couldn't believe the amount of cheques that happened all of a sudden in two hours.' I said, 'That's the way I live, that's the way I am, those are my signatures.' "

This is also the way she drinks.

"I am what you call a periodic alcoholic," Slick says. "I don't have a physical craving — like today, I didn't get up thinking, 'Jesus, I sure wish I could have a drink.' It's all psychological." Impulse. Sass and self-destructiveness. "I'll just be driving along , drive right into a liquor store, and bam, without thinking, buy three bottles of vodka, go out and get drunk."

Right out of the bottle. "I don't want to bother sitting there with the ice and glass and everything. That takes time. I just like the high. I don't like the taste of alcohol. The best drink if you want to get drunk is vodka. It is the strongest, the clearest alcohol. It doesn't have all that garbage in it to make you throw up. It's not — you know — with all the apricots, and all that junk with the liqueurs."

Slick always has been a binge drinker, lacking what makes most people realize they've had enough, or at least remember the next time how bad the last drunk felt. She was 15 years old the first time. A friend brought some whisky over, tasted it, and said, "God, that's awful." Slick drank the whole bottle. "And I liked it just fine."

A rock star could cherish a crutch like this, could lean on it one night and beat people ovr the head with it the next. There was a bluesy, bleary-eyed seductiveness to the half-empty Southern Comfort bottle Janis Joplin turned into a trademark, some public acceptance of strong-voiced women with liquor in their veins. And when Slick got drunk the fear went away, the small scared place that gnawed inside at a woman convinced that her voice range is limited, her face is not great, and her knees are too fat.

* * *

She would get angry, insulting. She would curse at close friends. Sarcasm born of shyness grew into bile. "I'm a mean drunk, aggressive, obnoxious . . . I sort of like the business of being a roaring jerk, but it's difficult to do that when you're sober, because you know you're being a jerk."

She kept landing in jail. "All one-nighters," she says, maybe 10 of them. "Let's see . . . Ohio, San Francisco, Marin County . . . Hawaii? No, I never went to jail in Hawaii. Paul went to jail in Hawaii, for marijuana. I don't know. Maybe there are only about five."

One night in March she was invited to a small San Francisco club to be part of somebody's skit, a game-show satire. Slick sat down with a friend beforehand and started in on the broadcast. She was in an edgy mood anyway, and by the time she was hauled off the stage, screaming, "You can't do this to me," she had shouted at the performers, cursed at the audience, and broken three microphones by throwing them down on the stage. She was contrite for a while afterward. Then she got in her Aston Martin and drove, and drove, and drove until the engine blew out. She pulled over into a ditch and asked somebody to call the Highway Patrol, and when the Highway Patrol arrived Slick said something along the lines of, "What the hell does it look like happened?" — something she remembers only clearly enough to know that it was a stupid thing, a very drunk thing, to say to a cop.

Slick went to jail again. When she got out of jail she went to a Marin County hospital program for alcoholics, to find out, as she puts it, "psychologically, what the deal is." She also began attending Alcoholics Anonymous meetings. She says she is still not sure exactly what the deal is, psychologically, but she had some ideas.

"Everyone wants to be numb in the area where you feel people don't like what you're doing," Slick says, slowly. "I'm not fighting other people. I don't really dislike or hate anybody. I'm trying to come up to my own idea of perfection, which is unfortunate, because nobody's perfect. I would like not to have fat knees; I would like to have a better voice; I would like to do more than I am doing; I would like to — you know — better, better, better, better — you're not doing it right, you're not doing it right . . . "

Her voice is rising now, and she is talking very quickly.

"You ought to do it more, you ought to do it better, you ought to do it with more people, you ought to do it with less people, you ought to do it faster, you ought to do it slower, that just constantly driving thing . . . . "

The Class of 'American Graffiti'

By GARY ARNOLD
The Washington Post

American Graffiti is even sweeter the second time around. The freshness, lyricism and nostalgic humor that made the film enormously appealing in the summer of 1973 have been enhanced — one's awareness of the subsequent careers of all the promising newcomers and relative unknowns in this phenomenal production.

Now in a fifth-anniversary revival, American Graffiti suggests a class reunion that turns out to be miraculously carefree, because virtually every old acquaintance you cared about has been prospering. It's an ironic joke on the movie's epilogue, one of the rare unsatisfying devices director George Lucas resorted to, in which the lives of the four principal boys in the story were updated, revealing that two of them had met untimely deaths. Nothing very bad seems to have happened to any of the key contributors to Graffiti, beginning with the illustrious case of Lucas himself.

Lucas' second feature, American Graffiti was made when he was 28 and reluctantly bankrolled by Universal on a measly budget of $780,000. About 10 per cent of that sum was spent to secure rights to the 41 rock 'n' roll songs, circa 1955-1962, that are used so evocatively as a musical accompaniment to and commentary on the episodic plot. The plot ingeniously compresses many of the good times, reckless pranks, frustrations and longings of a particular American teen-age generation into a single night of cruising in a small Northern California town.

WILLIAMS

SOMERS

Universal, along with every other studio, once before had rejected the script, devised by Lucas in collaboration with the young husband-and-wife screenwriting team of Willard Huyck and Gloria Katz. Universal relented only when Francis Ford Coppola, fresh from the triumph of The Godfather and eager to help his protege Lucas, agreed to produce it.

Graffiti stands in 13th place in Variety's list of all-time box-office hits, with rentals of $47,308,000, a figure destined to increase after the current revival. Lucas spent the four years after Graffiti preparing and shooting a little diversion called Star Wars, which became No. 1 on the Variety chart within a year, returning a reported $127 million in rentals to 20th Century-Fox from the United States and Canada alone.

The most conscious character in Graffiti was Curt Henderson, a witty, introspective teen-ager feeling pangs of homesickness on the eve of his departure for his first year of college in the East. The role was played by a somewhat pudgy but irresistibly smart, incisive, good-humored young actor named Richard Dreyfuss. It was the beginning of one of the brightest film acting careers of the decade, climaxed just a few weeks ago when Dreyfuss won the Academy Award for his performance in The Goodbye Girl.

Lucas and Dreyfuss could quit tomorrow and remain legendary figures in contemporary film history. In fact, Lucas now insists, rather maddeningly, that he has "retired" or "dropped out" from directing. He seems to have no immediate plans to direct again, although he will supervise production on a sequel to Graffiti, a sequel to Star Wars and a new comedy script, Radioland Murders, by Huyck and Katz. Many people in the business expect him to evolve into a production chief par excellence, a cross between Irving Thalberg and Walt Disney.

If Lucas and Dreyfuss are the preeminent graduates of the class of Graffiti, they aren't the only members of the class who've made a professional mark. Cindy Williams, cast as Curt's sister Laurie, became a TV star on Laverne and Shirley. One may appreciate her talent even more under the direction of Lucas, whose restraint seems to enhance the animation and emotionality that are allowed to go bananas on TV.

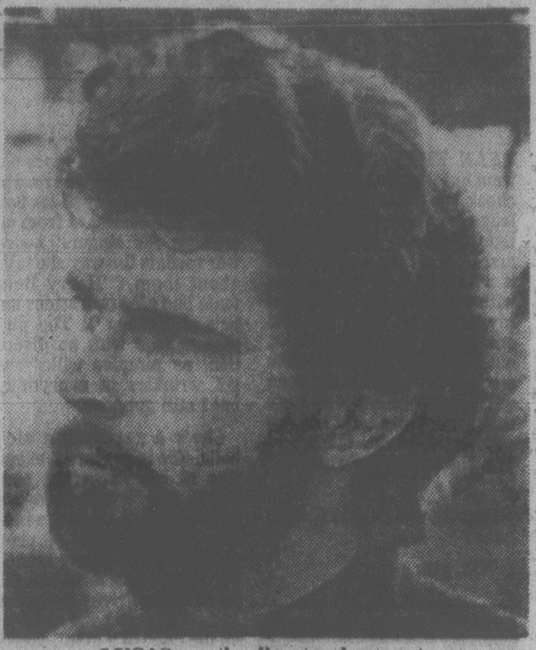
Ron Howard, who plays Steve, Laurie's boyfriend and Curt's best friend, was probably the most familiar member of the cast when the movie was first released, since he had been a fixture on Andry Griffith's television show for eight years. Since Graffiti, he has become a fixture playing straight adolescent to Henry Winkler's Fonzie on Happy Days, a series obviously inspired by Graffiti and responsible for spawning Laverne and Shirley. Howard has also directed and starred in a couple of successful knockabout quickies for Roger Corman called Grand Theft Auto and Eat My Dust.

Paul Le Mat, who played the gallant local folk hero, John, the undefeated drag racing champion, ought to become a star sooner or later. It might have been sooner if Citizens Band hadn't retailed so poorly. Le Mat's performance as the frustrated, do-gooder hero of Citizens Band was one of the most appealing characterizations of last year.

Mackenzie Phillips, cast as Carol, the brash 12-year-old who tags along with John for the evening, now appears regularly as the eldest daughter on the TV series One Day at a Time. Harrison Ford, the dragster who challenges John's supremacy, now stands on the verge of stardom after his performance as the impetuous, dashing Han Solo in Star Wars. Lucas has restored three short scenes cut from the initial release version. In one, Ford does an impersonation of Ezio Pinza singing "Some Enchanted Evening" in a futile attempt to amuse Cindy Williams.

Candy Clark, who won an Oscar nomination for her performance as Debbie, the drawling blond pick-up, has followed through with creditable work in The Man Who Fell to Eart and Citizens Band. A high-school girl named Kathy Quinlan, who appears as Peg, Laurie's mischievous-looking best friend, in the scenes at the Freshman Hop, developed into Kathleen Quinlan, the doe-eyed young dramatic actress of Lifeguard and I Never Promised You a Rose Garden.

The most amusing bit performer in the film is undoubtedly Suzanne Somers, whose current renown as a star of the series Three's Company gives her fleeting appearances in Graffiti a special kick. In case you'd forgotten, she played the mysterious, tantalizing blonde in the T-bird who becomes Curt's great phantom passion after she mouths the words "I love you" out of her window and hangs a right turn into indelible erotic fantasy.



LUCAS . . . the director drops out

Although starring opportunities haven't come along for Charlie Martin Smith, whose performance as the wimpy Terry the Toad seemed even funnier than I'd remembered, his career has not languished. He's bound to be an invaluable comic charcter actor as the years go by.

Only the writers, Huyck and Katz, have suffered what might be considered a major setback. Their first credit after Graffiti was the calamitous Lucky Lady. Now that they're reunited with Lucas, even that misadventure may be written off to experience.

Canadian Actress Reaches the Top on London Stage

By JOHN WALKER

LONDON — Actress Kate Nelligan is a woman trained to win — at school, on the tennis courts and now in the theatre. Next stop Hollywood.

The momentum that has carried her to the top started at her home in Canada. "It was part of the family pressure that one got the best marks in class. It was very bad news if you didn't," she said in London, where her new play at the National Theatre has just opened to rave reviews.

The play, Plenty, by David Hare, has established 27-year-old Miss Nelligan as a star of the British theatre just six years after her first stage appearance.

Her performance, as a strong-minded young woman who becomes disillusioned with post-war Britain, is a demanding one. She is hardly off stage for a moment of the two-and-a-half hour production.

It is part of her cool style that last year she left the National Theatre to act with the Royal Shakespeare Company and returned to the National for just this one play, something few actresses manage because of the rivalry between the two companies.

"I didn't want to make any other commitments because I want to be available for Plenty for as long as possible and even go to Broadway with it," she says.

"But when that's finished with, I want to go to the States because I'd like to make films very, very much. I'd like to spend six months looking around California, seeing if it's the kind of life I would like to lead or I would be allowed to lead.

"I'd like to have to prove myself to another set of people. There aren't many people in the British theatre who don't have an opinion about me. They either don't want to work with me or they do. It would be good to go where nobody had any opinions about me and start again.

NELLIGAN
. . . Hollywood next?

"I dread becoming a posh English leading lady of the theatre. I don't know why, but I don't want a predictable future."

It was unpredictable that Miss Nelligan should have become an actress at all. As a girl, she was among Canada's most promising young tennis players and her ambition was to turn professional.

"From the age of seven until I was 16, I played all the time," she says. "In the summer I'd practise eight hours a day. Even in the winter I used to play after school for three hours or so. All my family are gifted athletes."

But at 16, when she won a scholarship to the University of Toronto, she gave up tennis. "I began to hate it," she says. "I couldn't cope with the pressure of competing. I found it very painful and went to pieces."

At the end of her second university year, she abandoned that too, to travel to Yale Drama School to audition for London's Central School of Music and Drama. She was one of more than 1,300 hopefuls for two scholarships — and won one of them.

"I'm sure I was dreadful and they'd seen 400 people that day and weren't going to remember anyone. But I told them, which was true, that I had a one-way ticket to London and it was going to be very bad if I didn't have something to do, as I'd rather burned my bridges at the university."

To finance her stay in London she wrote to some rich Canadian families asking them to sponsor her. An Ontario family agreed to help.

"It's easier for me to act than it is for me not to act," she says. "The first time I went on a stage I felt completely at home, at ease. It wasn't the bright lights or glamor or excitement, but just a very quiet feeling.

"People think acting is very competitive but it isn't. I've been to one audition in my life, two days after leaving drama school, and I got a very good job. I played 13 leading parts in my first year.

David Hare, as a writer and director, has played an important part in her success. Her first London role was starring with Edward Fox in his political thriller Knuckle. London critics voted her the most-promising actress of 1974 for her performance as a confident nightclub hostess.

Earlier this year, she was praised for her acting as an unworldly, passive upper-class girl in Licking Hitler, a film written and directed by Hare for BBC television. He is one of only two directors she has enjoyed working with.

"It's been my experience that directors find critical intelligence in actresses very worrying. It undermines their confidence and they behave badly. Women get a lot of practice at hiding their intelligence, but I'm not good at it because I resent having to do it. So usually, you spend the six weeks' rehearsal dealing with a damaged ego.

"And David writes so well for women. In every play you've ever seen, the world as been looked at through men's eyes. In Plenty, we see the world through women's eyes, with men as the object and not as the subject.

"A lot of people will find that upsetting. But women are different from men only because of their circumstances, not because of their nature."

She has made two feature films — and has seen herself in neither. "I was miscast in The Romantic Englishwoman and know I must have been excruciatingly bad in it," she says. "It would give me enormous pain to see it."

Yemen rapidly becoming sleeper of Mideast tourism

For those who wish to discover the unknown, explore a country with rich, historical past, this republic offers all this plus exotic delights

By PHEBE MARR

SANAA, Yemen Arab Republic — At first blush, the Yemen Arab Republic (North Yemen), a remote country in the southwest corner of the Arabian peninsula, may seem an unlikely choice as a vacation spot.

But its rapidly increasing numbers of visitors make it the sleeper of Middle East tourism.

For those who still hanker to discover the unknown, who want to explore a country with a rich historical past, or who merely want to contemplate superb untouched landscapes, the Yemen Arab Republic offers unusual — even exotic — delights.

Yemen's main tourist attraction is its spectacular mountain scenery and its colorful tribal life, both reasonably accessible to tourists.

In summer, when the rest of the Arabian peninsula is parched and dry, its high mountain slopes, watered by the monsoon rains and carefully terraced by its farmers, turn a lush, inviting green reminiscent of Switzerland.

Sanaa, its capital, a city of fairy-tale architecture, is perched on a plateau over 7,000 feet above sea level, and is cool and comfortable even in August. Yemen is inhabited by settled (and not so settled!) tribes with colorful, distinctive customs, dress and handicrafts, most of which can be seen at rural markets and in city bazaars.

To see Yemen properly, the tourist should take four to six days to "do the triangle," a 450-mile drive over paved roads starting from Sanaa and proceeding west to Hudaida and Mocha on the Red Sea coast, east to Taiz (Yemen's second city), and north back to Sanaa. For those with less time, an overnight trip from Sanaa to Taiz is a must. Taxis can be rented in Sanaa.

The first leg of the trip, a four- to five-hour drive from Sanaa to Hudaida, will take the tourist through some of the most breathtaking scenery to be found anywhere in the world. The road winds through rugged mountain passes with villages precariously hugging sheer cliffs; old Turkish fortresses etched onto mountain tops; and refreshing mountain streams and waterfalls available for picnics and an afternoon swim.

Once in Hudaida, there are white sandy beaches to the north and south — best visited in winter, because of the summer heat; these offer swimming, fishing, skin diving and virtually instant suntan.

Next stop is the fascinating medieval town of Zabid and the ancient port of Mocha. Zabid, founded in the ninth century, has a lovely mosque which once housed one of the Islam's oldest universities, and is famed for its distinctive architecture. Its houses, constructed of intricately patterned whitewashed brick facades, are so picturesque that the town was used recently as the site of a film on the Arabian Nights.

Mocha, now famed for its coffee, was known for its textiles, gold, and spices in ancient times, when it was called Muza.

Taiz, a three-hour drive from Mocha, is a city of green terraces and fruit-growing orchards 4,000 feet above sea level. It has a number of well-known mosques of considerable antiquity, the most famous of which is al-Jund, dating from the time of Mohammad.

Taiz was the capital of the Imam Ahmad, the tyrannical ruler of Yemen until the bloodless coup of 1962. A visit to Ahmad's old palace in Taiz, now a museum, is a must.

The drive from Taiz back to Sanaa passes through more spectacular scenery and includes such historic cities as Jibla, a village nestled in the green valley near the town of Ibb.

Once the 12th-century capital of Queen Awra Bint Ahmad, one of Islam's few ruling women, it has a mosque dating from her time. This trip should be made on Saturday, if possible, to allow for a visit to the Saturday suq, an open air roadside market between Ibb and Sanaa.

Here one can find as many as a thousand hawkers, itinerant peddlers, camel merchants, instant restaurateurs, and other purveyors of all kinds of goods from local handicrafts to imported transistor radios at bargain prices in a dazzling melange of colors, smells and sounds.

Yemen's cities are just as exotic as its countryside. Sanaa, dating back to ancient times, is famed for its unique architecture. Its five- to nine-storey houses, with their whitewashed stucco work and stained glass windows, look like iced cakes. They are a delight to the eye wherever one turns.

It is a city for long, leisurely strolls (with a camera) through winding narrow streets along the old wall and through peaceful, tree-filled plazas. Its bazaar, filled with colorful local garb and aromatic spices, is one of the most authentic and unspoiled in the Middle East.

There is much to attract the history buff in Yemen as well, including some spots only recently opened to the West.

River rogues have answer to jet travel

SOLUTION IS TO RELAX ON COLORFUL RIVER BARGE

ON THE GO

With JERRY HULSE

You've done the Orient, right? Hurried through South America, joined one of those dizzying tours to Europe?

So what's next?

Figuring out an encore to that one is a perplexing question that legions of travellers face. But don't panic. There's a solution. It's spelled R-E-L-A-X. (Good for the nerves as well as the blood pressure).

Richard Parsons, a 39-year-old Britisher, and his French sidekick, Guy Bardet, 32, figure they've found the proper answer.

SLOW DOWN, say these two river rogues. Hurrying is obscene. Try a slow boat instead, particularly one of the colorful barges that drift leisurely through the canals and rivers of France and England.

Since the mid-'60s they've been barging North Americans through fields of blood-red poppies, vineyards, pasturelands and medieval villages. They've carried literally thousands of passengers. Now in their 10th season, Parsons and Bardet represent not one but seven vessels, each a converted coal barge.

OPERATING as the fleet's flagship is an old French peniche, the Palinurus. Parsons and Bardet converted her in 1966 to provide a floating hotel for up to 17 passengers.

"Seeing France at a Snail's Pace" was their sales pitch. It's the same in 1978.

Travelling by barge makes hurrying an impossibility. The Palinurus and other vessels move at a speed of 6.4 or 8 kilometres an hour, stopping frequently while their shippers navigate the locks.

AS A RESULT, passengers have the time to exchange pleasantries with the locals. Meanwhile, the crew buys garden-fresh vegetables from lock-keepers, and fishmongers come aboard with trout and sole.

I did this leisurely voyage seven years ago and it was a joy. Our days were spent studying ancient chateaux, charming hill towns and forests sometimes so dark the day became night.

We dined on quenelles and cheeses, escargots, frog's legs, magnificent salads and French pastries. Yes, and a rich Burgundy bottled in this very region.

THE PALINURUS covers nine itineraries during its two-month voyage, circling Burgundy via half a dozen canals as well as the Saone, Yonne and Seine rivers.

Seven years ago the fare for a week-long cruise was less than $200 per person. Unfortunately, inflation travels more rapidly than old barges, and so prices now start at $390 per person for a double or $470 for a single, which includes meals and wine.

AFTER TALKING the other day with Parsons and Bardet (they were touring the United States) I learned little has changed aboard the barges. For more than 30 years the Palinurus had hauled coal. It took a $120,000 scrubbing and face-lifting to convert her to a passenger-carrying queen. Parsons and Bardet installed four double cabins, two twins and five singles as well as a bar, a salon, three showers, a bath and three WCs.

Well, things are so peachy that today the boys represent six other barges. Besides the Palinurus the fleet includes La Guepe, the Mark Twain, the Virginia Anne, the Bonjour and a couple of others named the Water Wanderers.

EXCEPT FOR the Bonjour (she's confined to the Thames in England) all sail the canals of France.

Together, the two Water Wanderers travel as a team, moving leisurely along the Canal du Midi in the South of France, travelling near the Pyrenees, cruising beneath umbrellas of plane trees and offloading passengers at the old walled city of Carcassonne.

La Guepe, the largest of the barges, sails with 28 passengers along the river Yonne into Burgundy country south of Paris. With 14 twin cabins, she's Europe's queen of hotel barges. That is to say, the largest.

SMALLEST OF the fleet is an old Dutch estuary barge, the Virginia Anne. Operating charters only, she prices out roughly at $1,800 a week. While passengers luxuriate on deck, the Virginia Anne putters along the canals of eastern France, drifting by farms, vineyards and near-forgotten villages.

JOINING the others this season is the Mark Twain. She (or is it he?) carries six passengers in grand style. Scattered throughout the vessel are antique pieces and 17th-century furniture seldom seen aboard a boat — particularly a barge. Both bar and salon are paneled in teak and trimmed with brass, and there are windows from a 16th-century Belgian church, plus a library stocked with 700 books.

SKIPPERING the Twain are 64-year-old Norman Riddle and his wife Anna — both Britishers and both in love with the waterways of France.

Their travels take them through a wide area of eastern France — to Strasbourg, Besancon, Nancy and other areas.

When day is done aboard the Twain and other barges, wines are poured in a salute to sunset. The vessels' slow pace attracts travellers weary of exhausting tours and jet-age schedules, those seeking surcease from the world of action.

THE BARGES carry bicycles, and so I recall pedalling away at Avril sur Loire among fields yellow with buttercups and white with daisies, the entire scene framed by shocking green pastures and fields of wheat. Later I found the barge tied up downstream alongside a riverbank. That night the captain led us into a village where we joined the locals for a wine tasting session in a small, friendly bar.

FOR A BROCHURE describing both barges and itineraries, contact the local French Government Tourist Office or write to Continental Waterways Ltd., 22 Hans Place, London, SWIX-OEP, England.

Barge holidays are offered by yet another organization with a fleet of four vessels operating in Britain and Holland. Write to Floating Through Europe, 501 madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. The company also acts as agent for self-drive boats.

Sandstone walls hiking gateway

TISA — This little village in the northwestern corner of Czechoslovakia's western province of Bohemia has been famous for more than 200 years as the gateway to some of the best mountain climbing and hiking ground in north-central Europe.

The region received international attention as a tourist area in a guide book that was published in 1827 and since then it seems to have only grown in popularity.

The principal attraction is a remarkable conglomeration of sandstone rock formations of widely varying shapes and sizes that are divided into two natural enclaves known as the Great and Small Walls that extend in an east-west direction for a distance of about six kilometres.

The Great Tisa Walls are like a stone zoo, characterized by some strange shapes and names of many of the formations: the Crocodile's Head, the Tortoise, Wood Grouse, Seal, the Vulture in its Nest. Altogether, 56 rocks have been given names and some are likened to human beings: the Mayor of Rock Town, the Preacher, the Flattened Tailor, the Drunken major. Along the Small Walls, only 18 formations have been given names.

Up until the First World War, no one was allowed to enter the area of the Tisa Walls without a guide, but today the way through the labyrinth is clearly marked and tourists are permitted to roam freely on their own, although guides are available. Tours start and finish in the Rock Square, which divides the Great Wall from the Small Wall, close to the Posta Hotel which in turn is situated near a road that provides access from all directions and which, as presently planned, is to be linked to the main Prague-Berlin highway.

Museum's award tally to four

The Ironbridge Gorge Museum in Telford, Shropshire, has won the first European Museum of the Year award, bringing the museum's tally of major awards to four. It won the British Tourist Authority's Come to Britain trophy in 1973; a special Heritage Year award in 1975; and the British National Heritage/Illustrated London News Museum of the Year award in 1977.

Ketchikan has reputation to fulfill

No rain will draw chamber apology

Travel Tips

By STAN DELAPLANE

I walked into the oldest saloon in Skagway and called for drinks for the house. (Fortunately, there was no one there but me and the lady bartender.)

She said: "The city manager will be here in a minute. He can tell you all about the shooting of 'Soapy' Smith."

This is the time of the year when the cruise ships turn around from the warm winter Spanish waters and head for the Inside Passage from west coast ports to Vancouver, to Skagway, to Juneau, to Ketchikan.

On the main street of Ketchikan (10,000 population, third largest town in Alaska) there's a two-story barometer telling you the average rainfall is 151 inches. (One soaking year it hit 202!) If it isn't raining when you get here, the chamber of commerce people are a little apologetic.

They didn't disappoint us. Rain was wetting the ship's decks as we came dead slow through the green islands. A drizzly rain with wet gray clouds pressed on the steep, piney hills behind the town.

Main street's a row of tourist stores selling seal-skin coats with wolf-fur collars ($1,500 for the best). Knee-high seal mukluk boots ($95). Eskimo sits in store carving tusk. Cribbage board goes for $96.

* * *

It will cost you more to stay in Europe this year, but it will cost you a lot less to get there. Thus the Passport Office is estimating as many as 20 per cent more Americans and Canadians will go to Europe this year than last.

The attraction is a covey of new low-cost fares: APEX, Super-Saver, Budget, Chickenfeed, which are cutting the cost of getting to London town and Gay Paree.

* * *

The airlines low-cost fares are simply by guaranteeing themselves that planes will be full instead of flying half empty. Fares are worked out by you paying in advance—anywhere from 30 to 90 days. The airline then has an opportunity to package you all together and fill the plane. (This does not mean that you all have to travel in the same group. Once you arrive, you split. But you probably will have to all come home together on the same plane.)

* * *

I had lunch the other day with a woman who takes reservations by phone for a travel agency—these are the people who are on the firing line and know what is happening.

She said: "APEX is the most versatile low-cost fare that I have found. For example: The regular fare roundtrip San Francisco/London in July is $1,110.

"The APEX fare is $609."

She said: "Not all airlines quote the same APEX fares. We called TWA, Pan American and Luftanza and got just as many different fares. As much as $100 difference in one case."

* * *

"I am planning to spend three weeks travelling in Europe with a rented car and can't bear to leave my pet poodle, Pierre, at home. . ."

England is the big block for dogs. They don't allow dogs until they have been held in quarantine for six months. Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor tried to beat this with their own pet dogs by renting a doggy yacht and anchoring them in the Thames. (Doggy dinners were ferried out each day in silver covered dishes from the Hilton catering service.)

I think this got as high as the House of Lords for a decision. The answer was, "No dogs even if they arrive on the Queen Elizabeth II."

However, there is a transit service kennel at London's main Heathrow Airport. You can keep dogs overnight as long as you fly them onward the next day without them having put a paw on sacred British soil.

Not all airlines will fly dogs but Pan American has a pamphlet they will send you telling you how they do it.

"Are there any specials on golf tours?"

Practically all the airlines have golf tours based on playing golf a good deal of the time while you are there.

Compact Helsinki stroller's paradise

By BETTY WALKER

HELSINKI, Finland — A faraway land with strange-sounding names — and few tourists.

For the few, it usually is a one- or two-day stopover in Helsinki. A brief encounter.

Bus tours are recommended for short visits, but offer a fleeting glance of Finland's capital. Tram rides are fun, especially No. 3. It makes a figure 8 through the city's central area, passing many prominent sites.

But Helsinki is a stroller's city.

Midtown is compact. Buildings and parks are clean and attractive. The people are alert and friendly.

In Hesperia Park on the shore of Toolo Bay is Finlandia Hall, concert and congress center. Nearby are the City and National Museums and the 1952 Olympic Stadium. From the stadium tower the view is breathtaking.

Sibelius Park, wooded and serene, is dedicated to the composer. In a clearing, mounted on rocks, are two aluminum monuments — an abstract design of organ pipes and a bust of Jean Sibelius.

Don't miss unusual Taivallahti Church. Blasted out of solid rock, only the glass and copper dome is visible from the street.

On the lovely wide, tree-lined Mannerheimintie is Parliament (the Eduskunta) and Stockmann's, internationally known department store. A shopper's delight!

By BETTY PEACH

ZAGREB — Gates through the thick walls of the old city of Zagreb bear a coat of arms depicting open gates. It is symbolic for few places welcome visitors as warmly as here.

We arrived on a day of celebration marking Marshal Josip Broz Tito's 40th year as national leader. Streets were filled with a clutter of parade floats, school bands and marching units carrying hundreds of bright banners high above their heads.

At street corners, costumed youths broke into little impromptu folk dance steps, laughing and singing. But they paused, perhaps self-consciously, as cameras pointed their way.

All have known only Tito as president of their country. They seemed genuinely delighted to be honoring him and their affection for the 85-year-old president showed in their enthusiastic applause at his public appearances.

Yugoslavians live a far freer life than the residents of other socialist or communist nations that are neighbors.

They are warm and cheerful people, friendly toward each other and to strangers, even when there is a language barrier. Zagreb's Central Market, built on a terraced hillside leading up from the center of the city, is the largest and most modern in Croatia, one of Yugoslavia's six socialist republics. On Friday mornings it is crammed with folk art, handicrafts and farm-fresh produce.

Plump farm women sell round white cheeses, delectable pastries and great fresh loaves of brown bread. They offer thin slivers of the creamy cheese spread over small bread slices as extra enticement. All the while they exchange gossip with their neighbors, and sample each others products.

Yugoslavians eat well and often, yet obesity does not appear to be a problem. The traditional continental breakfast, usually just a roll and coffee, included fresh fruit juice and an egg in Hotel Zagreb Inter-Continental (the only luxury hotel I know with the audacity to put bathroom scales beside the shower. Multiply the kilo weight by 2.22 for the awful truth in pounds.)

For me, the old walled city, called Upper Town because of its fortified hill site, was as enchanting as any Europe has to offer. Its buff-colored stone buildings take on a golden hue in late afternoon, below the red tile roofs.

Many streets meander roughly parallel to the original walls, between rows of houses constructed from the 13th to the 19th century. More recent ones are exquisite mansions with lacy stone work and well-tended gardens.

Officially, the upper town is Old Gradec, and it is dotted with splendid stone churches. Most spectacular is St. Mark's, originally built in the 14th century but partly reconstructed 250 years ago. Its roof, worked into an elaborate mosaic of tiles, carries the coats of arms of Croatia, Slavonia, Dalmatia and of Zagreb.

Stroll up the hill and through the ancient archway of the Stone Gate built in the 13th century to guard the free city of Gradec. Now the gate and the broad tower above it are guarded by stone lions and live pigeons.

Tree-bordered Strossmayer Promenade leads to a traditional open-air flower market near the oldest part of the wall. From that area, take the little blue funicular cars that go up and down the steep hill, just as they have for almost a century.

At the foot of the hill lies a newer Zagreb with a broad central plaza full of flowers, benches, bandstands, and dozens of fast blue trolleys that whizz off to all parts of the sprawling city. People fill the center of the streets, where they can hop aboard the trolleys going either way.

Another much newer Zagreb has grown up beyond the city built largely in this century. A series of cluster communities, each self-contained and planned for about 50,000 residents, surrounds the older city.

Spanish influence still part of Santa Fe

By MARGARET NESS

SANTA FE, N.M. — Santa Fe's history stretches back to 1609 when it was founded as the capital of the vast Spanish territory of New Mexico. This makes it the oldest seat of government in the United States.

The same year, the adobe-style Palace of the Governors was built as the seat of government. The oldest public building still in continuous use in the country, it now is a museum.

The Indians who settled along the Rio Grande built their homes with a mixture of clay, sand and straw. Later, the Spanish conquerors adopted the adobe brick style for their houses. Today all public buildings in the city are in modern adobe stucco.

Albuquerque, the largest city (nearly 300,000) in the state, also clings to the adobe style, especially in its historic Old Town district, established in 1706 when Don Francisco Cuervo y Valdes, the 28th governor of New Mexico, settled several families on the fertile lowlands at the foothills of Sandia Mountain.

The old adobe homes have been restored and now house nearly 100 shops and La Placita Restaurant; originally an adobe hacienda belonging to a wealthy Spanish family.

Taos, on a high plateau flanked by mountains, is older than Albuquerque and nearly as old as Santa Fe. A handful of Spanish colonists settled there in 1615.

Its most famous citizen is Kit Carson, who lived in Taos for 42 years as a scout, rancher, Indian agent and army officer. His home is a museum.

Taos has numerous good galleries with both Indian and modern art for sale.

Albuquerque is an excellent place to start a tour. Its modern Indian Pueblo Cultural Centre provides a comprehensive background for the 19 Indian pueblos, or communities in the surrounding area.

There's no need to visit all the pueblos, as they are much the same, but there are two special ones. One is the oldest, a series of abandoned cliff dwellings that can be explored in Frejos Canyon in Bamdelier National Park. The other is Taos Pueblo just outside Taos.

Albuquerque also has its spectacular tramway with the third-longest span, 4.3 kilometres, in the world. The trip up Sandia Mountain takes 17 minutes.

Albuquerque is also the hot-air balloon capital of the world. This year's international fiesta, with at least 150 colorful balloons, is from Oct. 6 to 15.

All three cities are good places to buy turquoise jewelry and native pottery. Practically every shop features both, but the most fascinating place to buy is outdoors. The Indians come in from their pueblos and set out their wares on native rugs and blankets alongside buildings in the old town sections.

All three centres have excellent restaurants, several featuring Spanish-Mexican dishes. In this category are La Terulia in Santa Fe, La Cocina de Taos and Rancho de Chimayo between Santa Fe and Taos. The best, however, is the plain restaurant in Albuquerque's Indian Pueblo Cultural Centre.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Sunday, June 4

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Journeys, directions and directives could be featured. Spiritual insight is gained as past and present blend; you perceive your potential. Relative seeks your counsel concerning clothes, appearance, travel.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New approach to possessions, valuables, income — these are spotlighted. Leo, Aquarius figure prominently. Be generous, not extravagant. You gain enlightenment from one who is articulate. Evaluate, analyze. You'll perceive truth as you get to heart of matter.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Cycle high; your intuitive intellect is on target. You sense when something of importance is to occur. Aquarius, Cancer, Leo persons figure prominently. Accent on personality, individuality, willingness to stand tall for beliefs, principles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Join with social or church group in charity, hospital activity. You gain emotional fulfillment through organization or behind-scenes participation. Temporary confinement or delay actually proves a boon. Know it and respond accordingly. You'll laugh tonight!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent on friendship, acts of charity, generosity. One who has your best interests at heart pays meaningful compliment. Your life takes on a brighter hue. You find way of expressing, discovering, bringing forth best qualities.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Goal comes into sharp, clear focus. You see in a flash how far you can go, who is on your side and how to approach those who can provide key to achievement. Gemini, Sagittarius persons figure prominently.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with spiritual experience, travel, getting message across. Domestic adjustment on agenda: make intelligent concessions. Being diplomatic now, especially where family is concerned, proves wise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Philosophical questions about life, survival of human personality could dominate. Pisces, Virgo persons figure prominently — so does the number 7. Mystery can be solved — if you look inward. Seek truth, answers. You are on brink of "relevation."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Study contractual obligations. Includes legal and moral commitments. Accent on partnership ties, public relations, marital status. Let others show their hands. Do plenty of listening; plan ahead, lay groundwork for building, investing, initiating a lasting relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be diplomatic but insist on finishing what you start. Aries, Libra figure prominently. Keep diet, work, recreation, nutrition resolutions. Take time to smell the flowers. Ingest what is "good" for you. Reject sensational, superficial claims, proposals.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on creativity, affairs of heart, intense feelings, significant change of attitude. Leo could play prominent role. Children, creative endeavors are highlighted. You feel, touch, sense. What occurs will be meaningful and leave an imprint.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Build for security — check costs, promises. Obtain valid appraisals. Be positive of values. Hunch pays off — your intuition is stimulated and likely to be on target. Accent on parent or authority figure, home, business, willingness to adhere to rules and regulations.

IF JUNE 4 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are restless, talented, stubborn, were separated from one or both parents early — either in psychological or literal sense. You are unorthodox. You have had your "scrapes" with the law or authorities. You are independent, creative, considered "marvelous" by some members of the opposite sex. Leo, Scorpio, Taurus persons play important roles in your life. September could be your most significant month of 1978, a year featuring money, love, possible marriage and children. You're under pressure, but you thrive on it!

Astrological Forecast for Monday, June 5

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): New Moon position activates short trips, visits, dealings with relatives, fresh concepts, original ideas, creative endeavors. Leo, Gemini, Aquarius persons figure prominently. Welcome challenges, contacts. If versatile, you solve dilemma and you'll laugh about it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money picture is brighter — you are given choice and intuition works in your favor. New Moon highlights collections, locating "missing links," determining what should be retained, what discarded. Build on sturdy structure for security.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): New Moon in your sign symbolizes rebirth, a return of vitality, courage to be yourself. Travel, diversification, improved appearance, communication are featured. Another Gemini and a Sagittarian figure prominently. Stand tall for principles, but display sense of humor. You have foibles — laugh at them!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Cycle is up, but there is aura of confinement. Know that being alone is not same as being lonely. Check basic material. Deal with restrictions in patient, thorough manner. Visit friend or relative who is immobile or hospitalized.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Friend, who has marvelous "patter," could lack substance. The day features creativity, hopes, desires, intensified relationship. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius could figure prominently — and so does the number 5. Yes, the change occurs and the writing is "good."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Possible residence change, domestic adjustment are featured. Aspirations, goals command attention. You could be called to account for budget discrepancies. Explain, but do not grovel. Family member talks of love. Time has come to prove it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Good, New Moon aspect coincides now with long-range view, travel, language, written word and other forms of communication. Relative who gains strength through "art" of complaining zeroes in on you. Protect yourself. Be humane, but not foolish, gullible or a glutton for punishment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Organize. Focus on priorities, business duties, requirements. Your passions, impulses surge forward. Member of opposite sex wants you to decide, commit. Check budget, tax structure. Be selfish in sense that you avoid leading with chin. You'll comprehend!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): See as is, not merely as you think people and places could be. Look beyond the immediate; gain overall view. Aries, Libra figure prominently — so does the number 9. Accent on those who hold views opposite our own. Partnership and marriage also command attention.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New approach to employment, health, visiting relatives necessary. What had been hidden will be revealed. Leo, Aquarius and number 1 figure prominently. Yes, love also is in picture. Stress adventure, taking a chance on future as contrasted to being dull and comfortable in past.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emotion, intuition, variety, impulse, creativity an affair of heart co-mingle. Another Aquarian likely to be in picture — so, too, are Capricorn, Cancer and number 11. One who makes promise of riches, glamor, film stardom is having a pipe dream. Know it and protect self in clinches.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be flexible, despite demands from those who feel they know more than you about you. Sense of humor essential. Check diet, weight, nutritional requirements. You get support from surprise source. Your "psychic powers" come into play.

IF JUNE 5 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are analytical, right, charming, inconstant and you can love more than one person simultaneously. Gemini, Virgo and Sagittarius persons play important roles in your life. August could be our most significant month of 1978, a year featuring travel, creativity, love. If single, you could marry. Relationship is tested. You will be admired, appreciated and "leaned" upon. You learn, yet again, that you get nothing unless you pay a price.

A GENTLEMAN'S GAME FINALLY SURRENDERS

Heavens! Helmets For Cricket Yet!

By FRANK RUTTER

BIRMINGHAM, England — It may be the end of civilization as we know it—a batsman in the first cricket test match of the season is wearing a crash helmet.

Cricket can no longer be a gentleman's game when players are forced to resort to such protective measures.

It has become too serious and too commercial.

During the past week in lesser games between county sides, four players were injured by fast bowling, one of them, Ian Gould of Middlesex, suffered a serious head wound and was carried off the field on a stretcher.

Violence has alared before in cricket, most notably during an England tour of Australia in the thirties when bowlers deliberately aimed at the body instead of the stumps on the wicket.

But until recently it was shortlived and held in scandilized contempt.

Now bowlers appear to be hurling the hard cricket ball faster and "bumping" it (pitching a shorter length so it flies up at head level) more frequently.

The result is the appearance of helmets, some with perspex visors rather like the headgear worn by riot police.

England captain Michael Brearley wears what looks like blinkers, a slim guard under his cap to protect his temples. Phil Edmonds says he will wear a helmet when fielding close to a batsman at "short leg."

The county cricket clubs do insure their players but disability benefits are only $20 a week.

"We don't particularly want them in cricket but they are forced upon us by all the intimidating bowling that is going on," says Dennis Amiss, a former test player who has developed a glass-fibre helmet selling for $60.

Amiss no longer plays for England because he has joined what is known as "The Packer Circus" a travelling professional group organized by Australian entrepreneur Kerry Packer, who holds "world series" games using many of the most talented players lured by high salaries from India, Pakistan, the West Indies, Australia and England.

"Packer men" are banned by England and Pakistan from playing in test matches in a continuing controversy about the commercialization of the sport.

But now that helmets have made their appearance at Edgbaston they will undoubtedly be seen at the shrine, Lords, in the next test match. And after that, anything could happen to cricket.

BENNETT WINS TITLE

BURNABY — Nick Bennett gave Vancouver Island athletes their first title Friday in the provincial high school track and field championships.

The Victoria High School student captured the triple-jump event with an effort of 13.71 metres.

Peggy Nelson of Dunsmuir earned a second-place finish in the girls' 3,000-metre final with a time of 10:12:20 as Maeve Lyndon placed third in 10:36:20.

Tony Theriault of Esquimalt gave the Islanders another medal as he took third place in the 5,000 metres with a 15:31:00 clocking.

Hull Honored

BELLEVILLE, Ont. (CP) — Bobby Hull, Winnipeg Jets hockey star, became an officer of the Order of Canada when Gov.-Gen. Jules Leger made the presentation Wednesday at a sports celebrity dinner.

The medal was in recognition of Hull's prolific goal-scoring, as well as his insistence on fair play and a dislike of violence.

WESLOCK, ZOKOL QUALIFY

TORONTO (CP) — Veteran amateur Nick Weslock fired a one-under par 69 to finish with a 36-hole total of 143, two strokes better than Steve Fellinger of Niagara Falls and Bob Street of Toronto, to qualify for the Canadian Open golf championships at nearby Oakville, June 22-25.

Also qualifying from Western Canada was Dick Zokol of Vancouver, who finished 10 shots ahead of Calgary's Norm Gray in a 36-hole, two-man qualifying playoff in Vancouver.

No More Sitting Around

Today's firemen are making things happen. Prevention programs, inspections, public education, rescue operations, and teaching the latest in life-saving techniques — these are their major pursuits now.

And no one has done more to bring about the change in Saanich than Fire Chief Harold Gains who retired Friday after 32 years service.

In the six years Gains has been chief of the Saanich force, he has built up the fire prevention unit from a one man to three-man operation, set up a number of innovative public education programs, overseen the building of two new fire halls, and upgraded most of the rolling stock in the department.

It couldn't have been done without the municipal council members' support and to them he gives full credit.

Tall, greying, and soft-spoken, Gains, who turned 60 this year, believes fire departments should be getting into more and more related services.

He cites his department's cardio-pulmonary resuscitation program as an example.

Since the program started last October, more than 1,000 residents have completed the fire department's course on CRD techniques. Another 300 are waiting to enrol in the classes which are held twice a week at the main fire hall on Vernon.

Another example, says Gains, is a water safety and rescue unit, which he hopes will be in operation by the end of the year.

The department is now looking into facilities for training members in diving and water rescue.

"Basically what we're here for is life-saving," says Gains. "That's always been our principle function and it shouldn't be limited just to saving people from fires."

He notes the annual loss of property and lives in fires in B.C. is the worst in Canada, if not the world.

"The only way it can be improved is through public education," he says, "and the only people who can do that are those in the fire service."

The building inspection program, too, has mushroomed. In 1972 there were only 358 inspections. Last year there were more than 4,000. Every public building in the municipality is now inspected at least once every six months.

Under Gains, the Saanich department was the first in Greater Victoria, and possibly B.C., to promote smoke detectors by selling them directly to residents at cost. About 1,500 detectors were sold during a one-year campaign. The idea, he says, has caught on across the country. Now a number of fire departments are following Saanich's lead.

He's pleased with the government's decision to install detectors in all new public housing units, but to his mind that isn't going far enough. He'd like to see detectors in virtually every building where there is sleeping accomodation and predicts such a requirement will one day be incorporated in the national and provincial building codes.

Gains says Canada's poor fire safety record may, ironically, be partly due to the country's affluence.

"Because of our affluence we probably have a lot of habits people in other countries don't have such as smoking and drinking, the two greatest causes of fire deaths," he says. "I think we partake too much."

"But being an affluent nation we should be looking more to means of protecting ourselves, to protecting our lives because of our life style."

Gains concern over the statistics also stems from what he feel to be a prevalence of substandard housing. He believes it's only a matter of time before the upgraded fire safety standards set by the provincial government in 1975 for hotels and apartments will apply to every home in the province.

He's encouraged by Attorney-General Garde Gardom's recent announcement of the formation of a fire commission for the province.

"For years fire services have been a somewhat forgotten segment of the protective services in B.C.," he says.

Gains, born and raised in Saanich, joined the department in 1946, at a time when there were only 15 full-time firemen. Today there are 96.

He became a leading hand in 1960, lieutenant in 1965 and in 1970 was made an assistant chief.

For the past five years he has been chairman of the Greater Victoria Fire Chiefs Association and has helped bind the area fire departments closer together.

He says the Mutual Aid pact, whereby municipal forces agree to assist one another in emergency situations, is more widely used now simply because "we know one another much better now."

He doesn't believe the departments should ever be amalgamated as some municipal politicians are urging. Such a move would increase costs and lower over-all efficiency, he contends. But there could be more integration of services in such areas as training and purchasing.

But all of these problems and issues he's leaving behind.

"It's been a good job," he says. "I've enjoyed it. But I'm looking forward to retirement."

Pest Control Board's 2,4-D Hearings a 'Sham'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The provincial government's new Pesticide Control Appeal Board is out to rubber stamp use of the controversial herbicide 2,4-D in Okanagan Valley Lakes, a spokesman for the South Okanagan Environmental Coalition said Friday.

Jay Lewis of Naramata said in a telephone interview from Vancouver that all seven members of the board appear much more closely attuned to the position of the government and the pesticide manufacturers than they do to legitimate public concerns about environmental safety aspects of the program.

The provincial government has delayed 2,4-D milfoil applications pending the outcome of appeals launched against the program by a number of groups. The board held hearings earlier this week in Penticton, where they resume Tuesday.

Jean Douglas, president of the B.C. branch of the Consumers Association of Canada, who presented a brief at the hearings, described them as "totally staged to the Nth degree, a complete and utter sham of the worst kind."

Florence Whitmore, secretary of the Osoyoos Rural Ratepayers Association, said she felt outnumbered and outgunned by government lawyers and advisers when she presented her brief last week. "It's a very powerful board to go up against," she said.

The coalition spokesman added that he believes the board and the B.C. government want the case to wind up in court. That's what will happen, he said, if the board overrules the appellants and allows milfoil dumping to proceed.

"It's hideously expensive for us to go into court against the government with all its resources, supported financially by every taxpayer in B.C., and the board knows it" he said.

Illness Traced to Water

A stomach illness affecting at least 70 people has been traced to a contaminated well at Lake Cowichan, Central Vancouver Island health unit director Dr. Peter Reynolds said Friday.

Tests showed a heavy concentration of fecal coliform bacteria in the well water, he said.

The 70 people, all of whom stayed at the Honeymoon Bay Resort, complained of vomitting and other stomach upsets.

The pipe has been repaired and a treatment system is being installed.

Top Experts Now Vie Over Furs

By ANGELA TAYLOR

NEW YORK — If a woman complains that she can't find just what she wants in fur this year, she isn't really trying. Seventh Avenue designers have jostled each other to get their names on fur labels and a number of Parisian designers have joined the stampede. Since their individual moods differ, the simplest thing for the shopper to do is choose her favorite designer in cloth and then find what he's done for the fur department. There's a variety to spare.

HALSTON: Outstanding was a slender Russian fitch with superb markings. Zebra mink from Norway. Swakara lamb in a lovely golden color. A bevy of velvety sheared beavers, dyed in such colors as raisin, eggplant, moss green and copper. Cinnamon-dyed silver fox, very new. An almost-white chinchilla bubble jacket and another in white Russian ermine, finger-tip length and very narrow. The best fisher used for a blazer and a handsome cape.

GEOFFREY BEENE: Except for a few narrowish coats with drawstring waistlines, big, slouchy furs are the specialty here. After all, the designer just about invented the idea. This year, he gets more volume by adding sleeves of heavy knitting and cutting others in full, kimono fashion with no shoulder demarcation. He puts fur vests over fur coats — mink over mink, for instance.

PERRY ELLIS: The models wore dyed long johns and men's shoes with some of the roomiest furs around. Unlined raccoon, very long haired, from Finland. Excellent ribbed beaver jackets, some sleeveless. Gray flannel dyed fox. A jacket of pieced coyote that looks like plumage.

VIOLA SYLBERT: She always has a bagful of new ideas. The most ingenious is a poplin coat that reverses to muskrat. It doesn't stop there — the hood and sleeves zip off, for numerous possible combinations. Mole dyed a deep, forest green which becomes a knitted sweater when it's turned inside out. A lovely white Kalgan lamb jacket, collared and edged in ribbed knitting. Canadian marten dyed enough like sable to fool the experts. Pin-striped minks and heathery, weedy minks. And to melt an audience's heart, a dozen young children bundled in rabbit duffle coats and white lamb parkas.

YVES SAINT LAURENT: Why a furrier would employ the formidable talent of the French designer to do dozens of long-haired overcoats just like anyone else's is hard to understand. The over-long collection did have some Saint Laurent touches, however, mostly in the quilting he likes so well. Khaki cire or poplin is lined with rabbit, both sides quilted. Sleeveless vests of sheared furs are rimed with long-haired furs. The favorite jacket is a charmer — it's long, has extended shoulders, buttons low to hug the hips. It comes in a variety of furs and in fur-lined leather.

Bio-dex

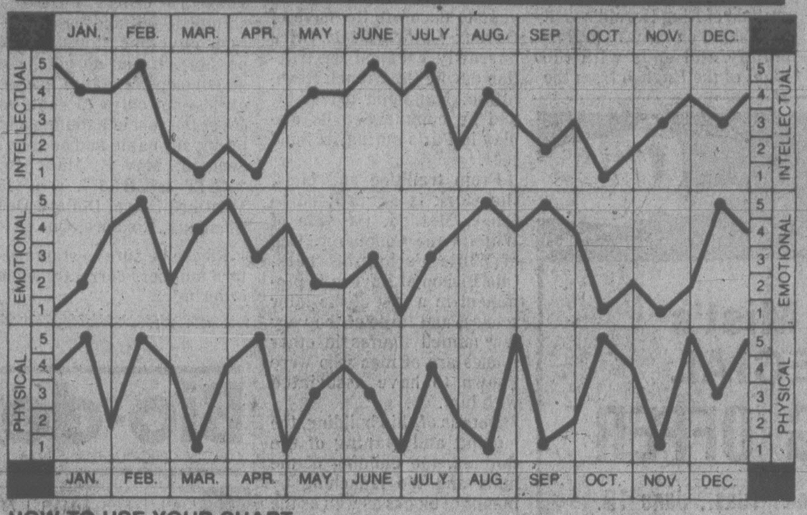
June 4/78

By Ken J. Michaels

Your computerized biorhythm

© BIODEX PRODUCTIONS 1978

Dist. by Toronto Sun Syndicate



HOW TO USE YOUR CHART:

BIO-DEX READOUT:

0-5 Negative Cycle-	Your tendency to moodiness gets in the way. Keep your emotions on an even keel.
6-10 Neutral Cycle-	You've reached a "fork in the road." Think carefully before deciding.
11-15 Positive Cycle-	The good you do now may not bring immediate results. Don't worry, the investment pays off.

There are so many people to thank when you've finally achieved independence: The kindly landlord who waited patiently for the rent, the bus driver who let you ride free, or the friend who gave you a bed when you first left home. Your high emotional Bio-dex is a good opportunity to pass on such generosity — to those who need a helping hand from you — right now.

If you have high blood pressure, there is some cause for concern.

The small 8-page pamphlet Straight Talk About High Blood Pressure explains that if left uncontrolled, high blood pressure can be the cause of heart complications and stroke. Furthermore, it says that high blood pressure requres ongoing treatment, to prevent it from climbing again.

Treatment for high blood pressure is almost always successful, but different people react differently to various methods of treatment.

Your doctor may ask you to change your diet, give up smoking or get more rest. Perhaps he will prescribe medication. In any case, it is important that you return to his office when he asks you to, so that he can evaluate your progress.

With your request please enclose a long (No. 10) self-addressed, stamped envelope and send it to: Quebec Heart Foundation, 1455 Peel Street, Suite 31/32, Montreal, Que., H3A 1T5.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: I am nine and my sister is 15 and we live on a farm with our parents. My sister is going to have a baby and she isn't married.

I never knew you could get this kind of service without a husband.

SURPRISED

DEAR SURPRISED: Well, you can. And that's why it's just as important for girls your age to learn how NOT to multiply as it is to learn how to add.

DEAR ABBY: I once felt that being a good Samaritan was a nice way to be. However, after reading that you discourage kindnesses such as helping to carry a stranger's luggage at airports, it opened my eyes. So I have written a few don'ts to follow:

1. Don't assist anyone having problems with their car. You are competing with tow trucks drivers, BCAA and mechanics. They could be put out of work.
2. Don't drive the elderly, sick or handicapped to hospitals or senior citizen clubs. You are competing with public transportation and cab companies.
3. Don't do hospital volunteer work. You are competing with paid hospital personnel.
4. Don't offer advice to anyone, regardless of how desperate they may be. You are competing with Dear Abby!

Sign me . . .

NO MORE NICE GUY

DEAR NO MORE: Aw, c'mon, you know I don't discourage good Samaritans or volunteers from doing their thing. I merely pointed out that people who make a practice of hanging around airports looking for folks to help may run into trouble with the professionals.

DEAR ABBY: You sure missed the boat with your response to the problem of the nervy couple who always dropped in at mealtime.

I would have suggested that they meet them at the door with their coats on and say, "Oh, Jim is just taking me out to dinner. If Tom wants to treat you, we'd be glad to have you join us!"

Their decision will tell you a lot about your "friends"! Be tactful but firm, and beat them at their own game.

ANOTHER COUPLE

DEAR COUPLE: A couple who would consistently drop in around dinnertime in hopes of getting a free meal would not be the kind of people I would want to join me — even if they paid their own way.

your health

By L. L. Coleman, M.D.

My wife is the self-made doctor in the family. Before any operation she researches everything until she becomes the professor. Soon I expect to have a cataract operation. She says that before I have this done I should go to some hospital where they put in a plastic lens after the operation. She found a place in Florida where this is done and wants me to go there. Can you tell me more about this type of surgery? — Mr. M.M.

Dear Mr. M.:

Sometimes a self-styled "doctor" can create confusion and introduce a great deal of anxiety in people who are about to undergo surgery. Rather than depend on your wife's judgment, I suggest that you discuss this problem with your own doctor who is contemplating the cataract surgery.

For the past 8 to 10 years, some eye surgeons have been implanting plastic lenses during cataract surgery. Other surgeons have not so readily accepted this radical departure from existing orthodox methods. Because the procedure has not been universally accepted by everyone it is valid to assume that there are some advantages and some disadvantages to the technique.

Even the surgeons who are more regularly using the intraocular plastic lens implant are very careful to find the "ideal" patient for the procedure. The age of the patient is an important factor. Most surgeons will not perform the operation on patients younger than 50.

Dr. David Shoch, chairman of the eye department at Northwestern University, said, "There are people who lack the manual dexterity to use contact lenses after cataract surgery, and there are people whose eyes are so sensitive that they cannot wear them. For those people the implant is a godsend."

There is, indeed, an excellent eye institute in Miami. But there are also first-rate surgeons living within a radius of five miles of your very own house. It seems pointless to travel to far-distant places when good medical attention is available near you.

Doing the Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Magnificent scarves with that French finesse . . .

People seem surprised that we did not return from Spain . . . and London . . . with a lot of new clothes . . . and even more surprised, when we tell them that we can get every bit as good and as smart things right here at home! . . . It's a fact, though! . . . Take Gibson's for instance, where this week we looked at things that had us drooling all over the place! . . . They've got some absolutely heavenly scarves by Balenciaga . . . Big, pure silk crepe and silk chiffon squares with all the new colors from now into autumn . . . Pinks, magentas, chocolates, blacks . . . and a gamut of shades in between . . . Gorgeous patterns, pretty enough for framing, these Balenciaga scarves are truly magnificent! . . . Nothing in Spain to surpass the new brief case purse in black or brown leather . . . Locks with a key . . . has a zippered outside compartment to hold wallet and keys . . . another inside . . . Convertible shoulder strap . . . And there are a couple of new evening dresses you simply must see . . . Both exemplifying the soft new look of chiffon . . . One is a creamy beige printed with small brown leaves, and blossoms . . . Dolman sleeves with tiny covered buttons . . . The other a black chiffon with tiny pleats over the hips . . . and a design on the blouson front and skirt which reminded us of a Fragonard flower painting! . . . Divinely simple dresses, elegant and beautiful! . . . Gibson's, 708 View St., 384-5913.

We've just been reading about the heat wave back east . . . and while Victoria has been far from sizzling as yet . . . you can bet there are lots of warm sunny days in store for us . . . (Correction: they're here right now as we read this proof!) . . . Which is why we think you'll like the new sun dresses we saw in Charmante's yesterday . . . There's a darling one, made in Honolulu, of 100% cotton in a pretty green print with white . . . Ties on either shoulder . . . Another style in cool-looking grey and white, has wide shoulder straps and a tiered skirt . . . This latter is a cotton/poly blend batiste . . . A lovely selection of short-sleeved dresses as well . . . one style in particular, by Tricot de Paris, a polyester knit with a scoop neck, in a shrimp shade . . . Lacy top and straight skirt . . . Also shades of aqua, pink and white, with pleated skirts . . . We like the cotton and poly eyelet embroidery skirts in a clotted cream shade . . . Little camisole tops match these . . . and a Ports blouse in the exact shade . . . Noticed some pretty cotton print skirts, some with stoles . . . Start summer with a superlative perm! . . .

We can't honestly say we'd no problems during last month's tour of Spain . . . A lot of things didn't live up to their promise . . . but one promise that WAS kept to a high degree was that made to us by George at the Charming Lady when we had our pre-departure permament . . . "You'll never have to worry about your hair now," said he, and by George! (excuse the pun) we didn't! . . . Come snow, hail, rain, wind and sun . . . our hair stood the test . . . without ever being touched by a hairdresser! We just washed it with the special shampoo G. sold us . . . And that's another thing about the Charming Lady . . . they've got products whose properties they understand and hence can prescribe and sell you hair preparations which are right for YOU! . . . Seems like we're always handing out testimonials for our favorite beauty shop but honestly, we're completely sold on them and what they can do for all types of hair (even the most miserable!) . . . They're real professionals who know their business from A to Z . . . All their permanents are custom-made, so to speak . . . Anywhere from 50 to 70 different mixings and blendings to get just the right formula for the individual client's hair . . . And it goes without saying . . . they're whizzes at cutting and styling . . . as well as coloring and treating dry or damaged hair . . . Why not find out for yourself? . . . Repeat of a popular cruise . . .

Last November a group of Victoria people returned absolutely ecstatic over a Caribbean-Panama Canal cruise under the aegis of Paulin's, who'd managed to get a block of cabins on the Island Princess and therefore offer them at less than regular rates . . . So successful was it that this year Paulin's have repeated the coup . . . aboard the Pacific Princess . . . sailing in the opposite direction . . . from San Juan, Puerto Rico to Los Angeles . . . The Departure date is Nov. 25th and you'll have two full weeks of cruising on the sunny Caribbean and through the exciting Panama Canal before arriving at Los Angeles on Dec. 9 . . . all tanned and rested and ready to start the Christmas season at home! Fascinating ports of call, like St. Thomas, Caracas, Cuaracao, Panama City, Acapulco and Cabo San Lucas . . . Fares include charter flight from Los Angeles to San Juan, where you board the beautiful cruise ship Pacific Princess . . . We're not going to quote fares here as they're subject to variables . . . but if you'd like complete information about this special cruise, call Ted Woodcock at Paulin's . . . He made the trip himself last year, as well as a couple of other people we know . . . all of whom would repeat the experience at the drop of a hat! . . . Paulin Travel, 532 Broughton St., 382-0168.

A Tapestry of the Past

KNIT AND CHAT

By MAY E. MacLEAN

As I mentioned last week, the Bayeux Tapestry is the most famous piece of needlework which actually records history, that of the Battle of Hastings in 1066.

It is not an actual tapestry in the sense of the word as we know it, being a band of linen 231 feet long, but only 20 inches wide and now light brown with age. Embroidered with worsted wool in only eight colors which have now faded, there are about 72 scenes depicting the Norman conquest of Britain.

The story begins with a prelude of King Harold's visit to Bosham on his way to Normandy and ends with the flight of the English from the battlefield. Originally the story may have been taken further, as the end of the strip has perished.

Now over 900 years old, it was long ago used once a year to decorate the nave of Bayeux Cathedral. It twice narrowly escaped destruction during the French Revolution. Napoleon prized it, and he commanded its display in Paris during 1803 and 1804.

From tradition and facts, the work is accredited to Queen Matilda, the wife of William the Conqueror. One of William's half-brothers, Odo Bishop of Bayeux is prominent in a few of the later scenes, and three of the very few named figures in other scenes are of men who were known to have associated with him.

Details of ship building, the cutting and planing of the timbers, the building of the hulls and the launching by means of blocks as well as the actual landing of the soldiers, are all shown in the various scenes.

In one panel we see the appearance of a comet, which we now know today was Halley's comet. It appeared at that time and was regarded as an omen of evil.

Of the actual Battle of Hastings, we see the English defending the ridge against the Normans, the fall of Harold as he was struck by an arrow, then the fleeing of what remained of the English army.

The Bayeux Tapestry is displayed behind glass in a small hall, with the embroidery placed at eye level around three sides. You can rent a small speaker in either English or French which tells you the story as you slowly walk around the room.

Another piece of needlework, known as the "Overlord Embroidery" was commissioned in 1968 to tell the story of another landing, this time on Normandy soil on June 6th, 1945, by Allied soldiers, but more about this piece, worked by the students of the Royal School of Needlework, will have to be the subject of another column.

This week's pattern is a crocheted trolley cloth in a rather unusual design which can be adapted to any size. Quick and simple to crochet, you'll find this particular design ideal for summer "pick-up" work.

To order Leaflet No. 7860, send 75 cents PLUS a stamped self-addressed return envelope, long one if possible. If you do not have an envelope or stamp, please enclose an extra 25 cents to cover the cost of handling and print your name and address. Send to: May E. Bio-dex

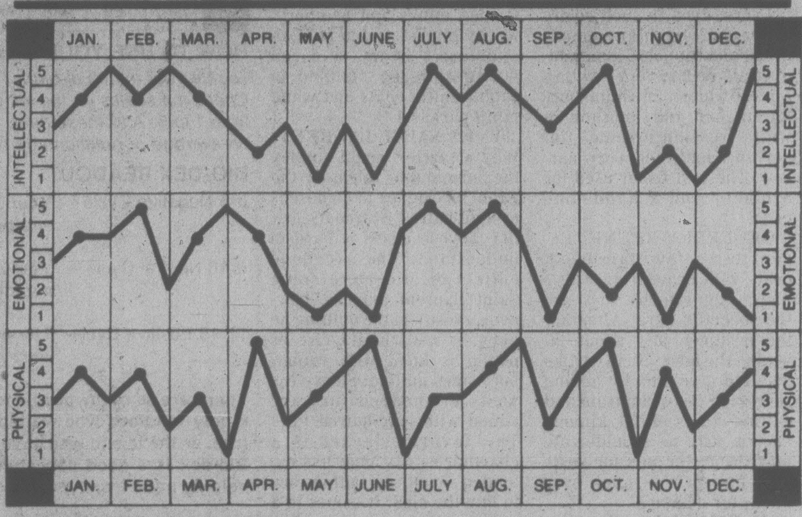
June 5/78

By Ken J. Michaels

Your computerized biorhythm

© BIODEX PRODUCTIONS 1978

Dist. by Toronto Sun Syndicate



HOW TO USE YOUR CHART:

BIO-DEX READOUT:

0-5 Negative Cycle-	If you have to perform in the public eye, try relaxation exercises before you go on.
6-10 Neutral Cycle-	Remember the world is bigger than it may seem. Plan a trip or write a distant friend.
11-15 Positive Cycle-	Somebody is missing you these days. Perhaps it's your turn to write a thoughtful, comforting letter.

A high Bio-dex reading puts your perceptions at an extra-sensitive stage. This is the time when premonitions can happen. Your dream life may be much more portentious now, as dreams tend to be more symbolic during these high cycles. Take advantage of your heightened awareness by working to make your dreams come true.

Prey-Spitting Fish Loves to Jump

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: The archerfish, the one that spits at its prey, kind of interests me. Are they smart? Sickly? How would one do in my home tank? — N.K.

DEAR N.K.: The archerfish, Toxotes jaculator, is an intelligent fish and reasonably hardy when its requirements are met. Being a six-incher as an adult, it can't be crammed into a small tank. Because it is a jumper, the tank needs to be carefully covered and in order to appreciate its water-projecting potential you need some space between the cover and the surface of the water. The archer likes a temperature of around 78 degrees F. and the pH of the water should be near neutral with a dash of salt added. This fish is territorial and a loner, so obviously it wouldn't fit into a community tank setup. It will eat meat, small worms and crawling or flying prey. These last are actually shot out of the air with a jet-propelled stream of water.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Melody's in the middle of one of her trying times again. She tries and she tries and she tries and not always with the same male dog either. The worst thing is, though, nothing ever happens. This is the third time and not a single puppy so far. Why do you suppose she has this kind of trouble? — T.D.

DEAR T.D.: While it's too early to tell whether Melody's third try is for pleasure or puppies (or both), her previous performances shouldn't be considered disappointing. No pups per pooch is the logical way to solve, eventually, the dilemma of hundreds of thousands of unwanted puppies and adult dogs. Few female dogs are as fortunate as Melody in being able to combine passion with nonproductivity. Without knowing the cause of her sterility, one can't determine how long her luck can hold out. Actually, the best answer for most bitches, including Melody, is an variohysterectomy (spaying) prior to this sexual Russian roulette.

DEAR DR. MILLER: I don't know where she keeps finding them but Martha, my cat, is a mouse eater. And I mean the whole thing, including the tail. There are many days when she doesn't eat a bite of cat food and I know she has found another mouse. Those mice and some grass and that's it. I've heard that lions and tigers eat a whole animal for complete nutrition so is Martha getting a complete diet when she hunts? — S.O.

DEAR S.O.: Martha's mousey meals may provide more than complete nutrition. Her furry feasts could carry undesirable side effects ranging from intestinal obstruction from consuming bones (though this is less likely when skin and grass are consumed) to diseases ranging from tapeworm infestation to bubonic plague. While it's true that mammalian meals consisting of the entire animal can be nutritionally complete, it's also true a nutritionally balanced meal in a can is a safer, if less exciting, diet.

OPAQUE WOOD STAIN

By A.J. HAND

Think of an opaque exterior stain as a hybrid finish for your home . . . a sort of a cross between a housepaint and a true stain. As such, it offers some of the appearances and advantages of a paint, along with some of those of the semi-transparent stains discussed in a past column.

For example, like a paint, opaque stain covers the wood completely with a film of pigments and resins. This film protects the wood from elements better than a semi-transparent stain can. But the opaque stain's film is thinner than the film created by a coat of paint.

This thinness make the stain somewhat less susceptible than paints to failures such as cracking, blistering, and peeling. And the thinness also allows some of the texture of the wood beneath to show through. So you get some of the natural woody look you achieve with semi-transparent stains.

This combination of the protection of paint and the look of a stain has made opaque stains increasingly popular over the past few years.

Opaque stains are at their best over bare wood. There they can penetrate, bond with wood fibers, and provide best protection with the least chance of film failures.

Although opaque stains are best applied to bare wood, they can also be used over semi-transparent stains, over themselves, and even over old paint. The idea of staining over paint sounds strange at first. But most opaque stains are so similar in formula to paints that there are no problems with poor adhesion.

Another good place to use opaque stain is on trim. Most stain makers offer opaque stains in the same colors as their semi-transparents. This lets you use semi-transparent stain on your siding, and the same color opaque stain on trim. The opaque stain gives good protection to the vulnerable trim, and offers a subtle but pleasing contrast to the stain on the siding.

Do not use opague stains on porches, decking, patios, or railings. They tend to rub off on shoes and clothing in these applications. If you want to stain, stick to the semi-transparents.

Opaque stains are based on many different formulas, but the most common are linseed oil, latex, and alkyds. Which is best? It depends. Latex stains are easiest to use. They provide good protection, are most resistant to mildew. But the oil and alkyd formulas penetrate better.

Post House pure maple yrup is made by the same age old process first learned from the Indians by Quebec farmers almost 200 years ago. Supplies are limited, so don't wait long to make up your mind. Order some today and try it over pancakes, waffles or use your imagination. It's one of nature's good things. Post House pure maple syrup is guaranteed naturally produced. It's a natural food made without additives or preservatives.

Interest Soaring in Comfrey

GARDENING

jack beastall

Interest in plants seems to follow cycles which are often triggered by a sensational article in a widely read magazine.

Whether or not that was the cause of renewed interest in Comfrey I cannot say, but questions regarding its value and its uses are increasing.

Many authors of articles on Comfrey are carried away when they learn a few facts. Its past uses as a food, silage, fertilizer, medicine, wound dressing, and as a bone conditioner, causes them to refer to it as the miracle or mystery plant.

Comfrey is not a new discovery. It was present in the ancient herbal gardens, and has long been used in emergencies on large plantations and farms remote from hospital facilities.

Its history is shrouded by the mists of time, and the many confusing stories of its appearance in Europe and America could well be guesswork.

In most of the populated areas of the world it is known as Russian Comfrey indicating its origin somewhere in northern Asia, but in America it is better known as Quaker Comfrey since it is believed to have been brought to this continent from Europe by the Quakers.

As gardeners we are mainly interested in its value as a garden plant. Its medicinal uses can be explored by those interested in library books and scientific literature.

Comfrey is listed under its botanical name of Symphytum officinale, and it belongs to the Borage Family. Selection has given a few improved forms which carry a varietal name.

It grows vigorously, reaching a height of six to seven feet in a good soil with leaves two feet in length and one foot in width.

Under my growing conditions I consider it a four foot plant with mature basal leaves 12 inches long and six inches at the widest part. As the plant increases in size a long leaf stem is produced to allow the leaf blade to avoid competition with others for sunlight.

The young growths which are used raw in salads, or lightly cooked as a green vegetable, are covered with gray silky hairs. Older leaves have sharp bristles on the back of the leaf mid-rib and the main leaf veins.

Comfrey is an herbaceous perennial since the top growth dies back in late fall and is renewed in early spring. Young growths can be gathered during the growing season and stored in the deep freeze for winter use, or dried in the same way as other herbs.

The roots of Comfrey go down eight to ten feet into the subsoil searching for moisture and minerals, bringing them to the surface for the benefit of neighboring plants.

Analysis shows Comfrey to be a land plant which is almost identical in its composition as the sea plant Kelp, with which many local gardeners are fully familiar.

It is high in protein and contains vitamin A, C and E. It is also a source of B12, the vitamin essential to starting and maintaining life in humans and animals, better known sources being animal products such as milk, cheese, eggs, and liver which is the richest source among these products.

Minerals included in high amounts are iron, manganese, potassium, copper, zinc, and silica, the latter being needed for good bone structure, hence the name Bone-knit used by ancient herbalists.

In spring growth is rapid and it is only a few weeks before the first tall flower stems appear. Although seed is made I have never found a seedling near an established plant. All propagation is done vegetatively.

As the flowers appear the plants are cut down to three inches above ground level. This is done about four times during the season in the average garden, although six cuts are recommended on fully established plants grown for stock feed.

In the home garden, the cut material is allowed to wilt overnight, then cut or chopped into small pieces the following day. The chopped material is immediately mixed with other plant wastes and added to the compost heap where the high nitrogen content is released and speeds up decomposition.

When used as a mulch the material is cut, wilted, and chopped in the same manner, spread thinly around plants or along rows, and lightly covered with soil.

In this case the nitrogen is absorbed into the top layer of soil for the use of nearby plants. Further decomposition releases the minerals to either the compost or the soil.

In a bed of shrub cuttings I notice those within a foot of a Comfrey plant advance more rapidly than the others as if benefiting from the minerals brought to the surface by the Comfrey roots.

Unfortunately we cannot plant Comfrey among our shrubs and fruits. A small plant as purchased must be located by itself in full sun and with plenty of room to spread. When fully established (3 years approx.) the crown can be removed four inches below soil level and divided into small pieces each with a growth tip.

The soil is levelled over the old plant and it soon produces new growths. When only one or two extra plants are needed side growths can be removed from established plants.

The deep rooting habit of Comfrey is due to its need for water to sustain the mass of growth. Young plants need copious watering for the first two years. Once established the plants are drought-proof.

In gardens containing a damp spot a Comfrey plant has helped relieve this condition because its deeply penetrating roots make channels which aid drainage.

Both Comfrey and Kelp make excellent liquid fertilizers for garden plants, and the Comfrey liquid, well diluted, is recommended for house plants.

The home gardener who makes his own liquid fertilizer from these two plants not only saves the cost of transporting processed sewage from the other side of the continent, but has a product containing all trace elements vital to healthy plant growth.

You may ask why Comfrey has not been processed commercially and marketed. The probable reason is that it can be grown in any garden, in almost any soil, and is not lost to drought or low winter temperatures, especially when mulched in colder regions. Therefore no commercial processor has any hope of cornering the market, which leaves a valuable plant for the gardener to process without cost.

WORK FOR WEEK

Last chance to prune the white Spiraeas. Cut back much of the old wood that bore flowers. Leave new to develop, S. prunifolia double variety benefits particularly.

Lilac flower heads should be cut off, especially from young plants, to increase growth during summer. Old lilacs can be pruned drastically at this time to reduce height. Mulch surface soil and water deeply each month of summer.

Spray rose tip growth and foliage with alginure to build up resistance to blackspot and aphids. Soap solution on the aphides will prevent their damaging the foliage. It must be washed off after 10 minutes with clear water from hose to prevent marking of leaves. Neither of these sprays are toxic.

Get remainder of summer bedding annuals planted; and sow seeds of evening Scented Stock, nasturtium and Scotch marigold.

Sow Wando and Sugarpod (edible pod) peas; green and yellow bush beans; beets, white turnips, radish, sweet corn, carrots, Buttercrunch lettuce and Corn Salad.

Remove growing tips from Broad Beans to control spread of black aphides. Use no toxic sprays on food plants, for each day now food is being taken from the garden to the table.

'Acid Rain' Menacing

WASHINGTON (WP) — Everytime it rains, it is not pennies from heaven, but corrosive acid, that is showering down on the earth.

Much of it is damaging sulfuric acid, a result of coal burning, that is pumped into the atmosphere from electric power plants and sent drifting to all corners of the globe.

The menace of "acid rain," as it is called in the environmental-science field, is certain to be heard about increasingly if coal moves into the pre-eminent energy position sought for it by the Carter administration.

Acid rain is attacking fish life, making lakes sterile, marring forest production, impregnating soil and snowcaps and working its way into the earth's eco-system.

The first serious studies of acid rain are producing some grim and pernicious prospects for the future, Leon S. Dochinger told a conference of environmental officials here Thursday.

"It is perhaps the most serious environmental dilemma of the century," Dochinger said. "We are talking about sulfur and nitrogen oxides, which come from coal burning and automobiles, from natural sources such as volcanoes and forest fires."

Dochinger is a Department of Agriculture air pollution specialist from Delaware, Ohio. He is co-author of a new paper on acid rain, from which he read Thursday at an Environmental Protection Agency research conference.

Among the findings that he, Gene E. Likens of Cornell University and Norman H. Glass of an EPA branch in Corvallis, Ore., have come up with are these:

—Rainwater, particulaly in the Eastern United States, has become increasingly acidic in the last 15 years. Data from New York and New England show the rain content is one-third nitric acid, two-thirds, sulfuric acid.

—Freshwater bodies in the Northeast, in Eastern Canada and Northern Europe — Norway and Sweden, where the problem is acute — are endangered by acid rainfall.

Fish populations, principally trout and salmon, are declining in acidified lakes in Norway an Sweden. The same thing is happening in New York's Adirondack mountain lakes — acidity is up and many of the lakes have virtually no fish life.

Gov't Leases Sanctuary

The National Second Century Fund of British Columbia has leased to the B.C. government a wildlife sanctuary and recreational area at Somenos Lake near Duncan.

Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf said Friday that the 99-year lease will cost the province $1 and will enable the preservation and enhancement of waterfowl habitat.

Quebec: Profit or Loss?

QUEBEC (CP) — As if the sales tax dispute was not enough, Ottawa and Quebec have resumed last year's battle over whether the province benefits or loses financially by being part of Confederation.

The two governments issued contradictory interpretations Friday of a Statistics Canada report on the flow of income and spending among the 10 provinces and the federal government during the last 15 years.

Federal Finance Minister Jean Chretien said in a statement that between 1961-76 Ottawa spent $5.2 billion more in Quebec than it collected in taxes from the province.

But Quebec said the federal government collected $731 million more than it spent in the province during that period.

In last year's debacle, Quebec Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau said Quebec was a financial loser in Confederation to the tune of $4.3 billion in that period.

Chretien said he wanted to emphasize that the accounts should not be used to try to assess the benefits for any province of belonging to Confederation.

"The benefits of belonging to Canada are clearly much greater than can be shown in a set of income and expenditure accounts," he said.

The Quebec statement, issued by the industry and commerce department, warned readers not to use the figures as "a final response" to the question of who gains from federalism.

"To arrive at such an accounting," Quebec said, "one would need to know the ultimate effects of federal expenditures, the past and current effects of federal policies in currency, foreign trade and economic growth, the effects on Quebec of Canada's membership in international groups and the Canadian defence policy."

And Chretien's statement said account must be taken of federal spending abroad that would be incurred by a province if it was not part of Canada, the effects of federal deficits of surpluses arising from long-term stabilization policies and of the large number of Ontario and Quebec residents who work in the other province.

When that is done, he said, it shows that federal spending between 1961 and 1974 was about $1.9 billion more than receipts from Quebec, an upward revision from the $1.7 billion reported last year.

QUEBEC MPS DUCK QUEEN

OTTAWA (CP) — Led by Conservatives, the Commons burst into God Save the Queen and O Canada Friday to mark the 25th anniversary of the Queen.

A couple of French-Canadians stayed away rather than become involved in the show of loyalty by about 55 MPs in the chamber.

Quebec Liberal Serge Joyal left the Commons and Quebec Conservative Roch LaSalle, who had been forewarned, stayed behind the curtains.

"I didn't know the song," LaSalle (Joliette) later said, chuckling as he explained why he stayed in the Conservative lobby behind the curtains separating him from the Commons chamber.

Nova Scotia Conservative Lloyd Crouse (South Shore) started the singing when he rose immediately after the Commons approved a motion expressing good wishes to the Queen.

Continuing Jobless Predicted

LONDON (TNS) — Unemployment "on a substantial scale" is predicted for Canada in the 1980s by a British-based international property firm.

The forecast is made in the annual report of Richard Ellis and Associates.

The firm of surveyors evaluates property around the world and has offices in Toronto and Vancouver, among many others.

Ellis says Canada's labor force is growing too fast — one and a half per cent a year — and will hit almost 14 million by 2000. Unemployment of eight per cent is expected to persist. "Although this should be a motivation to invest, it is likely in practice to be an inhibiting factor," the Ellis report says.

For bad measure, another economic forecast, this one from the prestigious National Institute of Economic and Social research, says the official predictions for growth in Canada's gross national product "appear increasingly implausible." The institute predicts this year's rise will be three and a half per cent not five.

Local Retailer Wins Award

WIN SINCLAIR

Mr. Sinclair, owner and manager of Miss Frith Fashions in Victoria was recently honoured with the "Retailer of the Year" award presented by Western Apparel Markets, which markets ladies wear to the retailers of B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan. Mr. Sinclair won the award for maintaining a high standard of ethics and degree of integrity in his dealings with representatives of marketing firms throughout the years.

Mr. Sinclair was born in Northern Alberta, educated there, and served with the Canadian Air Force in India and Burma. He joined the Hudson's Bay Company in 1947, later to work in Calgary, Edmonton and Winnipeg. In 1959 he moved to Victoria, having long been attracted to the beauties of the Pacific Coast and Vancouver Island.

By 1962 he had expanded Miss Frith's millinery store he had purchased soon after he arrived, and a year later doubled its size to include ladies wear. In 1971, he opened Miss Frith Junior next door.

Mr. Sinclair is an avid boatsman and golfer, a member of Kiwanis here in Victoria, and was chairman of the Health Equipment Committee, which raised money for special heart equipment now in use in Victoria.

Freddie Laker Now a Knight

LONDON — The Queen Friday knighted Freddie Laker, the British airline chief who pioneered cut-price, no-frills flights across the North Atlantic.

Sir Freddie, as he now becomes, is a bouncy former pilot who rose to head his own airline, Laker Airways, and then successfully fought the giant airline corporations to introduce his cheap Skytrain services to and from New York and other centres.

Sir Freddie, 56, has been vindicated in his argument that the Skytrain service, in which passengers show up in person and buy a one-way ticket within hours of takeoff, would tap a whole new market.

He was the most colorful character to receive an award in the Queen's traditional birthday honors, but other well-known personalities included actress Glenda Jackson, who was among those made a Commander of the Order of the British Empire (CBE).

A knighthood also went to another British transportation executive, Peter Parker, who as chairman of the state-owned British Rail network has introduced high-speed trains and streamlined services. Many Britons, however, still complain that their trains are dirty and antiquated.

INVASION OF A HOSTILE CAMP

The Caro-Kann has the reputation of being a quiet, safe opening, but there is nothing whatever quiet and safe about the game that follows. Black opts for a dangerous and interesting plan, and a complex tactical duel follows with the White King falling first. (Game played last year in Las Palmas, Canary Islands.)

Resigns

(a) A safer continuation would be 8.B-K2.

(b) This idea proves questionable as the open Knight's file poses White serious problems in securing his King.

(c) White feels his attack will get there first, but falls beneath some brilliant tactical play. He might have played 14.B-K2 instead.

(d) Having foreseen the intricate complications that follow, Black bravely prepares to invade the hostile camp.

Failed to Wed, Sister Nabbed

MONTREAL — The Gazette says an Algerian millionaire kidnapped his sister and had her flown to their native country in April because she refused to marry the 60-year-old man she had been promised to at birth.

The paper says 26-year-old Delila Maschino, who was brought up a Moslem, incurred the wrath of her family by marrying Denis Maschino, an Algerian Christian, in Paris five years ago.

Canada and Algeria do not have an extradition treaty, and there is no way charges can be pressed unless the millionaire returns to Canada.

Bowing to Lord . . . Not to Jimmy

NEW YORK — Ruth Carter Stapleton said Friday she is bowing to the wishes of the Lord — and not her brother, Jimmy — in cancelling a scheduled appearance before a Long Island Jewish-Christian group.

The appearance, which was announced two weeks ago, caused a furor among Jews who object to evangelism aimed at converting Jews to Christianity.

In a news conference, Mrs. Stapleton said President Carter was the first to tell her about the controversy surrounding her scheduled speech before B'nai Yeshua in Stony Brook, N.Y., on June 8.

"I asked him, 'Jimmy, what must I do?' And he said, 'I've never told you before what to do — and I'm not going to tell you now'," Mrs. Stapleton recalled.

NO TIME FOR FRIENDS

SEATTLE — A Vancouver man has a new understanding of the friendly expression "hands across the border."

Mahendran Kanakaratnam's understanding began in Seattle in March, when he found himself $1.30 short of a $10.30 cab bill because banks were not open and he had run out of cash.

He struck an agreement with the cab driver to pay $5. All he had to do was leave his $70 watch as security.

Kanakaratnam says he returned that evening to pay the rest of the bill but the cab driver said he didn't have the watch on him.

Now, says the cab company, the watch has been lost in the mail.

Kanakaratnam takes the blame for the whole incident because he should have known better.

"I should have known. I've seen the painting, you know, the one showing the hands clasped," he said, referring to the "hands-across-the-border" symbol.

Surgery for Jackie

CHICAGO — Jackie Gleason, in hospital since last Sunday with heart problems, will undergo open heart surgery Saturday, WBBM-TV reported.

Rita Goldman, a spokesman for Michael Reese Hospital, refused to confirm or deny the report that Gleason would undergo coronary bypass surgery.

Gleason, 62, was admitted to the hospital May 26 complaining of chest pains. He has had cest pains since that time, Ms. Goldman said.

SOLICITING LAW 'AMBIGUOUS'

OTTAWA (CP) — Progressive Conservative justice critic Eldon Woolliams called Friday for a Commons committee examination of the laws on soliciting and prostitution which he says are ambiguous.

"Every Canadian is entitled to know what the law is," Woolliams said in the Commons. "For the law to be respected and obeyed it must be clear, concise and free from ambiguity."

He said people who are being tried for soliciting, vagrancy and prostitution are being tried for offences which are not against the law.

They are being tried "merely for publicity purposes creating a false, unnatural and unwarranted punishment."

He was referring to a series of recent court decisions which said soliciting applies only to the prostitute (male or female) but not to the customer.

Gov't by Indians

WHITEHORSE, Yukon (CP) — A comprehensive land claims summary just released by the Council for Yukon Indians includes demands for a separate Indian government and Indian control over renewable resources.

The document represents the first concrete position paper compiled by the council since 1973 when it was charged with negotiating a land claims settlement for Yukon Indians.

The central legislative body described in the position paper would allow the Indian people to administer "complete legislative and administrative authority over renewable resources in all of the Yukon and over non-renewable resources" situated on Indian land.

Noose Use Urged

OTTAWA (CP) — Conservative Dan McKenzie said Friday the death penalty should be brought back "as a warning for terrorists not to start in Canada and also as a warning to keep terrorists away from Canada."

But Justice Minister Ron Basford replied that the government has no plans to restore the noose that was outlawed in 1976.

McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre) said in the Commons Defence Minister Barney Danson was quoted recently as saying the assassination of former Italian Premier Aldo Moro was a classic example of the need to execute terrorists.

Danson told McKenzie he was not making a recommendation when he made that statement, but was speculating on the things which could be done to reduce terrorism.

Basford said the Criminal Code contains a number of measures designed to deal with terrorists threats.

"Fortunately in this country we have not had instances of that occurring to any large degree," Basford said.

UIC Cheat Fined

SURREY (CP) — William Haworth, 29, was fined $600 in provincial court Tuesday after being found guilty on three counts of making false statements to the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Cost Cuts Sought

OTTAWA (CP) - Prime Minister Trudeau has asked all federal departments to find ways of slicing $500 million from this year's budget.

A letter circulated May 23 by the prime minister's office asks all department to notify the Treasury Board of possible cuts so reductions can be announced this summer or early in the fall.

DES Liver Probe Set

OTTAWA (CP) — Health Minister Monique Begin today promised an immediate investigation into the inspection procedures for meat and livestock following a report of high levels of a banned chemical in samples of beef liver.

Begin told the Commons health department offcials will check a radio report that a cancer-causing growth hormone fed to cattle that was banned in Canada in 1974 has been discovered in nine of 10 samples tested in Toronto.

The minister was replying to Lorne Nystrom (NDP—Yorkton Melville) who identified the banned chemical as diethylstilbestrol (DES), which is fed to cattle to promote weight gain.

Nystrom said that of 10 samples of beef liver purchased from four retail outlets, nine were found to contain high levels of DES.

The Saskatchewan MP said one sample contained a level as high as 3,720 parts per billion while laboratory tests have shown the levels of two parts per billion are toxic to animals.

The chemical was banned in 1974 and all cattle imported from the U.S. must be tested to make certain there are no traces of DES.

MPs Go to Bat over Staff Raises

OTTAWA (CP) — MPs went to bat for their staffs Friday as criticism mounted over pay increases awarded this week the 2,500 employees of the Commons.

As about 100 secretaries and researchers who work for MPs picketed outside, Conservative House Leader Walter Baker told the Commons that staff morale "has been harmed by the selective and mysterious manner in which this occurred."

A complicated wage formula was announced Wednesday by Speaker James Jerome which raises the pay for some classifications while holding the line on others.

The increases cover the 700 person in MPs' support staffs plus guards, administrative staff, secretaries and parliamentary messengers and pages. They were worked out by Jerome and other members of a House committee on internal economy.

Jerome said in an interview he is surprised at the level of dissatisfaction that has been expressed but that the matter "is totally closed."

Spokesmen for members of MPs' staff have described the package as an insult.

The two researchers allowed each of the 264 MPs, for instance, have been given $666 raises bringing their maximum annual pay to $11,759. Many of these people hold university or other post-secondary education degrees, work longer than 40 hours a week when the House is sitting, receive no overtime and have no job protection.

Meanwhile, raises of $2,400, the maximum allowable under the government's wage-and-price controls program, were awarded to the executive category, bringing their annual salaries to more than $47,000.

Conservative labor critic John Fraser (Vancouver South) said it is difficult to keep staff on dedication alone.

Cuban Aid To Lapse

OTTAWA (CP) — External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson said today he would be glad to consider stopping remaining Canadian aid to Cuba because of Cuban military intervention in Africa.

But, he said in the Commons, the remaining development assistance is minimal and there might be "grave difficulties and problems insofar as Canadians are concerned" in ending aid. He did not elaborate.

He was replying to Progressive Conservative external affairs critic Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona) who called on the government to stop aid to Cuba now rather than just letting it run out later this year.

Stopping aid now would give Canada greater credibility if this country goes before the United Nations Security Council to demand action against Cuban military activity in Africa, he said. The Conservatives have been urging government action in the Security Council.

Jamieson said his statement the fact that Canada is not contemplating further aid to Cuba carries more weight than stopping the small amount of assistance remaining.

Jamieson and Prime Minister Trudeau have said they deplore Cuban military intervention in Africa. But Trudeau said in Washington this week that Canada does not want to be involved in African adventures and advised foreign countries to stay out of Africa.

WRITERS HELPED

The provincial government will conduct a one-year trial program of providing publishing assistance to writers in British Columbia.

Recreation Minister Sam Bawlf, the minister responsible for cultural services, said Friday in a news release the new program will involve a system of grants to publishers to increase publication of work of cultural significance, and would be confined to books on B.C. He didn't disclose further details or the amounts involved.

Parents To Get Free Aid

Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Friday that family services delivered by ministry staff in support of parental efforts in their own home will be given free of charge.

He said in a news release this will include the family support worker program, the infant development program and staff social work services.

Vander Zalm said the new policies emphasize the responsibility of parents in caring for their children, define which services will be fully subsidized and which require parental contributions, and establish guidelines for a partnership between parents and the ministry.

"Financial contributions from parents will continue to be expected for services purchased from local agencies, such as homemakers, day care and special services to children," he said.

"Day care for handicapped children at integrated centres will now be fully subsidized on a half-day basis."

Stephens Joins Hearings

Progressive Conservative leader Vic Stephens was added Friday to the list of members of the legislature sitting on the Crown corporation reporting committee.

Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy said the number of MLAs on the committee was being increased to 16 from 14 and that Stephens and Len Bawtree (SC—Shuswap) would join Ed Smith (SC—North Peace River) as new members. Smith, the former speaker, replaces Harvey Schroeder (SC—Chilliwack), the new speaker.

Stephens had been complaining since the beginning of the session that the Conservative party was not represented on the committee.

Trail-CUPE Dispute Probed

Labor Minister Allan Williams has appointed barrister Hugh Ladner of Kelowna to conduct an industrial inquiry into the 15-week dispute between the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the city of Trail.

Williams said in a news release Friday that Ladner will look into the 40 issues preventing resolution of the dispute, and make recommendations on how to bring about a quick settlement.

Used Heat for Wash. Homes

SEATTLE (AP) — About 12,000 homes in the Bellingham area just south of the Canadian boundary will be heated by recycled heat from industry, federal energy department officials said Wednesday.

The department announced a $1 million grant to Rockcor, a Redmond, Wash., rocket research company, to develop a pilot plant in Whatcom County. The project is to involve use of waste heat from the Intalco Aluminum Co p. plant.

If successful, the project could have national application, saving up to 11 million barrels of oil each year, energy officials said.

Region Pact Ratified

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greater Vancouver Regional District Employees Union has voted 93 per cent to ratify an agreement with the district.

The agreement gives a four per cent increase on a base rate of $15,000 a year and some fringe benefits, a union spokesman said. The contract covers 14 municipalities and three territories in the Lower Mainland.

New Computer Printer Speeds UVic Jobs

The University of Victoria has improved its publishing capacity with the addition of a computer printer to its department of computing services.

The Multiwriter III unit installed recently will permit publication of professional quality work such as manuals, guides, theses and charts, said acting director of computing and systems services Dave Stothard.

He said the $4,600 machine prints 30 to 40 characters per second, which would allow an ordinary double-spaced thesis of 200 pages to be produced in less than two hours.

Besides publishing its own user guide manuals, the computer department expects the unit will be heavily used by such other departments as mathematics and linguistics for statistical tables and language character sets.

Material programmed into the computer system may be edited and printed in a single continuous operation. The Multiwriter is fitted with an interchangable daisy wheel printer, available in various faces for English, French or other character sets.

Unruly Crowd Rallies Against Crime

NEW YORK (AP) — Anti-crime doesn't pay — at least for Mrs. Marianne Hofmann, who took a $5,250 beating on her "people's rally against crime."

It was billed as a rally against muggers, rapists and murderers.

The 500 people who paid $1.50 to sit in Madison Square Garden's 5,000-seat Felt Forum turned out to be somewhat unruly themselves.

They frequently interrupted the speakers and often shouted among themselves about "bleeding hearts," "false liberals," and "Commie pinkos."

"We have all kinds of speakers and all kinds of listeners," observed the master of ceremonies, who declined to be identified.

Mrs. Hofmann, a victim of two burglaries who risked her life savings to stage the rally, said afterwards: "I got my $6,000 worth because the people are here having a good time, enjoying themselves.

Her husband, Heinrich, who said he nearly fell out of bed when he first heard on the radio that his wife had pledged their life savings, was realistic about the whole thing. "I've been poor before," he said.

Among the speakers was Sam DeMilia, president of the city's Patrolmen's Benevolent Association. At first DeMilia was reluctant to address the gathering. "There's a lot of crazies out there," he said.

DeMilia eventually took the stage to tell the receptive gathering: "If a criminal takes a life, his life must be taken." The crowd responded with a standing ovation and shouts of "Bravo."

Sue over Pulled Plug

CHICAGO (AP) — The University of Chicago Hospitals and Clinic has been sued for $1 million for allegedly "pulling the plug" on a 14-year-old boy's respirator without obtaining his parents' consent.

The action, filed Thursday in Circuit Court, also charges the hospitals with "reckless and wanton disregard" for one day telling Mr. and Mrs. Walter Burtin of Gary, Ind., that their son Daniel was dead, and then the next day telling them he was still alive.

The suit said the University of Chicago was responsible for removing Danny from a respirator March 30 at Wyler Hospital, part of the university's hospital system.

The hospital did so, even though officials "knew or should have known that to do so, permission from the parents or an order of court, was necessary, if not mandatory," the suit charged.

Also named in the action was La Rabida Children's Hospital and Research Centre.

The youth was being treated at La Rabida for an asthmatic condition on March 24 when, the suit charges, he was wrongfully injected with mecholyl, a drug used in the treatment of respiratory disorders.

Lions, tigers, monkeys, elephants — even a boxing kangaroo — will be featured when the Shrine International Circus comes to Victoria June 19 and 20.

Other acts include the Paula Sisters, aerialists from England; the Hernandez Troupe, a group of acrobatic artists; the Hubert Castle Circus elephants and a human cannon-ball act where a man is shot more than 125 feet through the air.

Reverend Dr. Andrew Mowatt officiated at a doube-ring ceremony in the Church of Our Lord on April 22, 1978, at 5 p.m. when Judy Lynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Chandler, exchanged vows with Glenn Allan Newsome, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Newsome.

Given in marriage by her mother and father, the bride wore a full length gown, which she designed and made by herself, of trilobal satin with round neckline, lace overlay on bodice and sleeves, featuring a full-length lace train. She wore a veil of silk illusion tulle, and carried a cascade bouquet of white carnations, yellow sweetheart roses and stephanotis. Matron of Honour Mrs. Loree Mitcham, and the bridesmaids, Miss Loraine Strickland and Mrs. Doralee Cairns, wore identical gowns of powder blue with capes of floral chiffon accented by white hats and spring bouquets. Mr. Rick Newsome attended as best man, and ushers were Mr. Bruce Chandler and Mr. Russ Mitcham. The mother of the bride was attired in pastel green gown with corsage of yellow carnations, rosebuds and stephanotis. The groom's mother wore a beige gown with corsage of amber carnations and stephanotis.

The reception was held at the Cedar Hill Community Centre. Long-time family friend, Mr. Ed Burnett proposed the toast to the bride and everyone danced to the music of Pan Musican Ltd. A number of friends and relatives attended from Duncan, Vancouver, Kelowna and Toronto. Following the reception Mr. and Mrs. Newsome left on a wedding trip to Mexico. For going away, the bride wore her own creation of a three-piece yellow gabardine suit, brown orchid corsage and brown accessories. The happy couple now reside in Victoria.

SLOWER RISE IN U.S. PRICES

WASHINGTON (WP) — Wholesale prices rose 0.7 percent in May, down sharply from the 1.3 percent surge in April, the Labor Department reported Friday, but government economists found little solace in the apparent slowdown.

The department also reported that the May unemployment rate edged up from 6.0 to 6.1 percent, an increase economists say is insignificant.

Armageddon in Four Years, Historian Fears

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — Armageddon may be closer than the world thinks, a disarmament meeting was told Friday.

But while U.S. historian Dorothy Baker predicted nuclear war might come as soon as 1982, Canadian disarmament expert Norman Alcock was more optimistic, saying it might happen in the 1980s but does not have to happen.

The two were speaking at a people's assembly, one of a series of meetings and rallies being staged by non-governmental organizations in conjunction with the UN special General Assembly session on disarmament.

Dr. Baker based her conclusion—"we are at the crucial climax of civilization"—on a complicated study of cyclical forces in history. Using a complicated framework, she compares the rise and fall of past civilizations to the present and concludes that war might come in four years.

Alcock, director of the Canadian Institute for Peace Research in Oakville, Ont., uses a computer model to study disarmament, war and the prospects for peace.

Alcock is a former nuclear scientist who abandoned a career at Canada's Atomic Research Facility at Chalk River, Ont., to study peace.

He said his computer model takes in much more than just a study of cyclical trends.

"It was made up of arms races, military alliances, territorial problems . . . some of the variables stayed in and others did not."

He said his program for disarmament, starting in 1982 is based on his computer studies. It calls for 10-per-cent reductions in military budgets each year until the end of the century.

"Then, the model generated itself year by year," he went on. "The tension that arms spending produced . . . dropped. At the same time, we siphoned off money from disarmament to stimulate the domestic budgets of each country."

That, in turn, allowed more money to go to the poorer countries, producing "a better world than we have today."

Alcock said he thinks Canadians are in a good position to provide moral leadership by taking concrete steps on disarmament.

CELEBRATING their 65th wedding anniversary Sunday are Mr. and Mrs. George Robinson of 3069 Henderson. They will hold open house between 3 and 5 p.m. Robinson, founder of Robinson Sporting Goods, will be 90 in October. They were married in Metropolitan United Church, then the Methodist Church, in 1913. Mrs. Robinson has been teacher and supervisor of the primary department of Metropolitan for 58 years. CARTER FIRM ON FAST SALT

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter says he is determined to complete a strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT) with the Soviet Union "without delay."

Carter made the statement Friday while denouncing as "totally inaccurate" a story in the Washington Post that the administration had effectively frozen the negotiations.

In another development, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, without mentioning Carter's comments or The Post story, said in a Soviet television interview broadcast Friday: "The Soviet leadership begins to think that the U.S. administration quite often gives little support to the agreement and does not give a due rebuff to its adversaries."

Carter told White House correspondents that The Post story was both damaging to the United States and to his credibility.

Citing unidentified "authoritative sources," the newspaper said "the net effect of new administration tactics for SALT is to reject any new Soviet proposals for the time being."

Directly challenging this assertion, Carter said his basic policy has not changed—"that is, to proceed aggressively with the SALT discussion."

He said that before The Post published the story its reporters were informed their account was totally inaccurate but that "the editors decided to go ahead with it anyway."

"With the greatest respect, we still believe that our information is correct, that recent decisions taken by the administration have had the effect of freezing SALT negotiations in such a way that agreement this summer is precluded."

Chinese Minister Flies to Zaire

Times News Services

KINSHASA, Zaire — Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua flew to Zaire today in what diplomats said was an unusually open attempt to counter rising Soviet and Cuban influence in Africa.

The Chinese mission was independent, but apparently coordinated with the policies of Western countries which will be meeting in Paris Monday to discuss future aid to Zaire.

"We have similar interests to the Chinese in Africa and Zaire, but we are not working in conjunction with them," an American source said. "The Chinese interest here is to keep the Soviets out."

American sources said Huang discussed the African situation at length in Washington last week with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

The subject also was discussed during conversations which National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski had with Chinese government leaders in Peking last month, the sources said.

China has always been close to the Kinshasa government of President Mobutu Sese Seko. They have a large embassy in Kinshasa and, among other projects, are running an experimental farm at the presidential retreat at Nsele, just north of Kinshasa. Several Chinese medical teams also operate in Zaire.

The Chinese also actively supported the two Western-leaning guerrilla groups that lost out to the present Marxist rulers of neighboring Angola.

One diplomatic source said Zaire army troops "have just about finished cleaning out the houses" after a week of pillaging in Kolwezi, where more than 1,000 persons lost their lives in a nine-day rebel occupation.

In Kinshasa, security preparations were intense in advance of the Chinese minister's visit. The city was full of troops patrolling the streets in armored cars and on foot.

The Paris meeting on Zaire will bring together senior officials from the United States, France, Belgium, Britain and West Germany, who will discuss measures to prop up the nation's foundering economy.

The countries also will discuss possible logistic aid for an African security force that may take over from Belgian and French paratroopers in Shaba province. An advance guard of Moroccan troops already has arrived.

Meanwhile in Washington, a Carter admininstration official said U.S. military transports will begin flying Moroccan troops into Zaire within the next few days—a first sign that a proposed Pan-African peacekeeping force may be taking shape.

In addition, the official, who asked not to be named, said Friday the United States will fly the remaining French legionnaires out of Zaire's war-torn Shaba province.

In Kinshasa, Zaire said today it has resumed copper-mining in the key southern town of Kolwezi, exceedingd production levels achieved before last month's rebel insurgency there.

BRITONS KILLED AT BEACH

LONDON (AP) — Gunmen killed five British employees of an aviation company during a beach picnic in the oil-rich Persian Gulf state of Oman, the British foreign office said today.

Two other Britons who were swimming in the sea at the village of Taqa on Oman's Arabian Sea coast survived the attack Friday, a spokesman said.

The seven men all worked for the British Airwork Services Co, which specializes in setting up airport facilities in developing countries, particularly in the Middle East.

All were members of the company's fishing club and were spending the day on the beach, the spokesman said.

CAR-GO RAIL DROPPED

TORONTO (CP) — Via Rail Canada, a federal agency, has announced plans to discontinue Canadian National Railway's Car-Go Rail service.

As a result, a person wishing to ship his car to Vancouver will pay twice as much and will have to wait longer.

Persons wishing to ship their cars west now must use Trans-Canada Auto-Train Transport Ltd. which charges $541 and takes seven to 12 days for delivery.

1 Million Starving

LONDON (Reuter) — Up to one million people are starving in Ethiopia's Welo region because of a drought and special airfields are being built to aid relief operations, Addis Ababa radio reported.

The radio, monitored in London, said people in the affected area, northeast of the capital of Addis Ababa, were eating diseased grasses and 47 have died of poisoning.

The radio estimated that between 600,000 and one million people were starving in the western Welo region.

It said Ethiopian leader Col. Mengistu Haile-Mariam has set up a special committee to mount relief operations and three airfields were being built in affected areas to enable planes and helicopters to fly in food.

Meanwhile in Brussels, Claude Cheysson, the European Economic Community's development aid commissioner, said agricultural production in Ethiopia has increased considerably since the country's agrarian revolution was launched in 1974. Cheysson visited Ethiopia last week and met Mengistu.

Alfred Grant Cooley, 37, of 6615 Feltin in Sooke, was ordered detained in custody by Judge William Ostler following a bail hearing.

Cooley was jointly charged with 26-year-old John Alexander McLeod and his 24-year-old wife, Gail Ann, both formerly of 669 Constance, with possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking and conspiracy to traffic in heroin. Mrs. McLeod was also charged separately with importing heroin.

The McLeods, represented by Vancouver lawyer Gordon Hayes, were ordered released on $15,000 surety bail each.

They elected trial by judge without jury on all charges and were remanded until June 12 to fix a date for a preliminary hearing which Crown counsel Malcolm Macaulay said might take up to three days.

Commenting on the extensive use of guns in this area, Ostler sentenced a 20-year-old man to three years in jail for an April 10 break-in during which eight handguns were stolen.

Jeffrey Glen Smythe, 946 Balmoral, pleaded guilty to breaking and entering International Knives, 574 Yates Street.

Crown counsel Don Laughton told the court Smythe and a companion drove to the store and the companion acted as a lookout while Smythe took a pair of bolt cutters and cut through a protective screen before smashing a window and taking the guns.

Laughton said Smythe, who is also known as Jerry Glen McIntosh, later took police to Shawnigan Lake where seven of the buried weapons were uncovered and to a place near Hall's Boathouse on the Malahat, where the remaining gun was uncovered.

After noting that Smythe had a "shocking and sad record for a man so young" and that Smythe was on parole since January of this year, Ostler handed out the penitentiary term.

Also charged with the break-in was 21-year-old Hany Fahmy, who appeared in court Thursday and elected trial by judge without jury. Fahmy is expected to return next Thursday to fix a preliminary hearing date.

A 28-year-old man charged in a shooting incident Thursday morning in a Saanich apartment on Tattersall was released on bail and remanded until next Thursday to fix a preliminary hearing date.

Martin John Trowsdale, 944 Tattersall, was charged Thursday with possession of a dangerous weapon, a rifle, and mischief causing wilful damage to a car belonging to his brother, Wayne Brian Trowsdale.

Laughton said he would not object to Trowsdale's release on condition that he remain sober and not possess any weapons until the case was dealt with. Defence lawyer Ken Walton said his client agreed to those conditions.

Laughton said Rivet left a bill of $170.30 at the Swiftsure and couldn't pay it. He told police he arrived in Victoria from his native Quebec on May 28 and stayed at the Swiftsure until Thursday.

* * *

Laughton told the court Desjardins was convicted in Kitchener of driving while suspended in 1972 and in Victoria of driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08, failing to remain at the scene of an accident and driving while suspended in 1977.

Ostler said Desjardins could serve the 30 days on 10 consecutive weekends.

2,4-D Debate Grows Intense

PENTICTON (CP) — Debate over the use of the herbicide 2,4-D to combat Eurasian milfoil in Okanagan area lakes has grown into an intense public relations campaign.

As the debate becomes increasingly technical, many people are forced either to choose sides on a philosophical basis or to throw up their hands in confusion.

Ald. Rod Barrett, who had to choose sides, voted to oppose a provincial government plan to treat between 300 and 600 weed-infested acres this summer.

"I prefer to err on the side of caution," said Barrett, the only member of council to oppose the plan. "There are so many things that are said to be safe and then turn out to be dangerous.

"I remember when DDT was supposed to be safe. I also remember standing on the porch when the truck came down the street and getting sprayed."

In casting his vote, Barrett rejected the assurances of Environment Minister Jim Nielson and opted for the cautious approach of those who feel there is evidence that 2,4-D may cause birth defects and cancer.

The main local opposition has been the South Okanagan Environmental Coalition, a group of individuals who banded together last spring with the belief that the government did not have all the answers to questions being asked about long-term effects of 2,4-D.

The coalition set out to find answers of its own and came up with The Other Face of 2,4-D, a compilation by Jay Lewis and Jack Warnock of evidence questioning the safety of the chemical.

Nielsen called opponents armchair environmentalists who use scare tactics.

"They can't attack our data, so they've resorted to name calling," said Warnock, 44, an orchardist at nearby Naramata who once taught political science at the University of Saskatchewan.

While Nielsen dismisses their report as not being the work of scientists (though scientists were quoted), Warnock and Lewis said the provincial government has been short on facts itself, preparing this year's program before last year's test results were complete and relying instead on ministerial re-assurances.

Dr. Gerald Miller, a University of Minnesota professor whose report the government has offered as evidence, said reports of 2,4-D's harmful effects are "generally speculative and coincidental" and that people who oppose its use are usually opposed to use of all chemicals.

The government's plan is supported by local councils, whose municipalities use the lake for drinking and irrigation, and by the Central Okanagan Regional District, which gave approval but refused to accept responsibility for any problems caused by the chemical.

As allies in opposition, it can list the Scientific Pollution and Environmental Control Society (SPEC), the B.C. Medical Association and Dr. David Clark, the North Okanagan medical health officer. He said the provincial government has treated the region "like a banana republic" in pushing its plan.

$20,000 IN SAXE PT. PARK

Phoney U.S. Bills Found, Pair Held

An RCMP investigation into a counterfeiting racket has resulted in the arrest of two Greater Victoria men and seizure of about $20,000 in phoney United States bills found at Saxe Point Park in Esquimalt.

John Daniel Vosper, 21, of 2792 Millstream, and Robert Gordon Sewell, 20, of 1166 Rhoda Lane, appeared before justice of the peace Jack Fawcett in provincial court this morning.

A police spokesman said the investigation, spearheaded by the Vancouver RCMP commercial crime section and involving Vancouver and Victoria municipal forces, is continuing.

Police are conducting a number of house searches in the Victoria area and further arrests may be made. Officers declined to say whether they are looking for more counterfeit money or give any indication of how large a counterfeiting racket they are investigating.

Both men surrendered without a struggle.

Police would not say where the money was found, other than it was somewhere in the park. All of the counterfeit money was in $20 U.S. bills.

A court official who saw the money described it as "crisp" and of "lousy" quality.

"It looked like it went through a washing machine," he said.

Smith asked for a three-day remand to give police more time to complete the investigation.

He told Fawcett that Sewell has at least six aliases and mentioned a warrant outstanding in the Nanaimo area.

He said police had not had sufficient time to investigate Vosper's background.

There are indications the pair will face other charges, but details won't be known until Tuesday when they are expected to enter pleas and apply for bail.

More Transit Shafts Feared

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

If the provincial government is going to dump the bus system on the municipalities, it must offer a financing formula that is fair and long-term, Victoria transportation committee chairman Ald. Bill McElroy said today.

"Under the present plan they can change it (their contribution) from year to year," McElroy said.

"The provincial government will increase its share before an election and lower it afterwards.

"We can't leave ourselves at the mercy of the balance-the-books guys or they will shaft Victoria again."

McElroy's comments, while strong, summed up the concerns of regional mayors and other officials who liked the idea of more local control for transportation but worried about the cost.

Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith said municipalities already have severe tax burdens and he opposes the provinicial government plan.

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young said B.C. Hydro is making big profits from electricity and should pay the bus costs because "they should keep the good and the bad, just as they always have."

Victoria Mayor Mike Young said the change was unfortunate while Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier and regional board chairman Jim Campbell saw advantages in local control of transportation policies.

The provincial government plans to turn the bus system over to the municipalities some time after next April 1.

Costs would be shared by the province and the municipalities. The provincial government would allow municipalities to raise their share through a surcharge on electricity bills or property taxes, or by adding up to three cents to the gasoline tax.

PRIESTS SLAIN

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — Two white Roman Catholic missionaries, a West German and a Swiss, were killed Friday during a guerrilla attack on a remote bush mission station near the Botswana border, the Rhodesian military command said today.

BRANDON (CP) — Four Brandon doctors being sued for negligence have admitted in court documents that a scalpel blade was left in the abdomen of a woman during an operation performed in November, 1975.

But in statements of defence filed in Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench, they deny any neligence and say they followed proper procedures in the diagnosis and treatment of the woman.

Milfoil Reaches Pender

VANCOUVER (CP) — Recreational boaters are suspected of introducing Eurasian milfoil weed into Magic Lake on South Pender Island, a provincial environment ministry spokesman said Friday.

Peter Newroth said patches of the weed now stretch for almost half a kilometre in the lake.

The government has completed a survey of 200 lakes in British Columbia and found that the milfoil weed — well known for its severe infestation of the Okanagan Lakes — has also covered 30 acres of Cultus Lake and is invading the area where the Sumas River joins the Fraser River.

Milfoil threatens the Magic Lake drinking water supply, Newroth said, but residents have been planning to switch over to another lake for their drinking water.

"It appears the weed is spread by people's activities," said Neworth. "So we're asking all boaters to clean the hull and propellers of their boats before they travel from one lake to another."

Newroth said the government does not plan any control measures other than posting warning signs. He said the boating public must take the initiative and then the government would respond to requests.

It's Staying Sunny!

Victoria is enjoying the hottest June on record and the sunshine should continue at least until Wednesday, the weather office said today.

Temperature records fell at both Pat Bay and Gonzales on Friday and new marks are also expected to be established today.

Friday's temperature was 27.3 at Pat Bay, breaking the old record for June 2 of 27.2 degrees set in 1970.

Downtown, the temperature hit 27.2 degrees, breaking the 1950 record of 25.7.

For today, the June 3 records are 25.6 (1970) at Pat Bay and 26.7 (1969) at Gonzales and by mid-morning it appeared both marks would fall.

Weather forecaster Ian Higgs said the only element disturbing the sunshine ridge is a low trough of fog working its way up the Washington coast.

The fog is beginning to enter the Strait of Juan de Fuca and may be quite prevalent on Sunday.

This would bring cooler temperatures near the water but the pattern of hot, sunny weather will continue just a few kilometres inland.

Beer Sales Jumping As Supplies Dry Up

Supplies of beer are running low in Victoria as customers begin stockpiling due to the threat of a strike-lockout in the industry.

In Vancouver, Carling O'Keefe has already been closed by a strike. The other breweries have voted to lock out their employees.

However, they have not yet served 72-hour lockout notice.

"What we fear most of all is a rush by stockpilers," one liquor store manager said today. "That could wipe us out in a hurry."

The breweries were meeting with union leaders today in an effort to resolve the dispute.

The 260 employees at Carling O'Keefe have been without a contract since Dec. 31, while contracts at Molson's and Labatt's expired April 20. Strikers have said they won't return to work until they have a signed agreement.

In Victoria, Tex Enemark, deputy consumer affairs minister responsible for the Liquor Distribution Branch, said there is "a very real possibility of a long, dry summer" in the province.

He said the effect of the current breweries' dispute would be felt throughout the province, adding that beer supplies cannot be expected from Alberta where there already is a shortage caused by higher summer demand combined with a strike at Carling O'Keefe in Calgary.

Enemark added that the unions also would object to bringing beer in from other provinces.

'No Cod War' Fishermen Vow

VANCOUVER (CP) — Expulsion of United States fishermen from Canadian waters was supported Friday by the West Coast fishing community, despite fears the move will mean losses to some Canadian fishermen.

Canadian waters will be closed to American fishermen Sunday as an attempt to pressure the U.S. to get down to serious bargaining on fishing rights. The U.S. has retaliated by announcing its waters would be closed to Canadian fishermen.

Officials on both sides of the border, however, were careful not to call the development a fish war.

Ian Todd, head of the offshore commercial fisheries division, said in Vancouver: "We are not approaching it as a war. There is absolutely no way we are going to have a cod war on our hands.

"We're not trying to erect a great barricade of barbed wire across the equi-distance line." There may be a "buffer time" given to the fishboats to leave Canadian waters, he said.

Patrol boats and aircraft will check the 200-mile coastline, he said. U.S. boats fishing in Canadian waters will face penalties ranging from a reprimand to a jail sentence, a fine or confiscation of gear, vessels or catch, said Todd.

Todd said that the boats will not have to be out of Canadian waters by the deadline — they will simply have to stop fishing.

Both sides said they regret the action, a suspension of the 1978 interim reciprocal fisheries agreement, already provisionally approved by the two governments. Officials pledged to work towards a final settlement of disputed maritime boundaries and hydrocarbon resources. Special negotiators are to resume their talks June 19.

George Hewison, secretary-treasurer of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, said the closures "will create some problems for us, but to live with the deal we had was very bad for fishermen over-all."

Salmon fishermen restricted to Canadian waters said they will be denied access to an area they estimate can yield $6 million to $8 million a season.

However, salmon fishermen gained with the reopening Friday of Swiftsure Bank at the entrance of Juan de Fuca Strait. The bank, over which fish pass destined for American waters, was closed at U.S. insistence in an attempt to get a fisheries deal.

Halibut fishermen may not be affected, but if they are, they face loss of a fishery worth about $10 million. Canadians will have less competition for bottomfish such as cod. U.S. fishermen are estimated to have fished about $3 million worth of bottomfish last year.

With American fishermen out, Canadians will also get more shrimp. The main shrimping area is off Tofino, on the west coast of Vancou-

Teacher Training Cut Urged

The provincial government wants post-secondary institutions to cut back on the number of teachers they train, Education Minister Pat McGeer said Friday.

McGeer told the legislature that an average three-percent annual decrease in school enrolment means fewer teachers are needed.

An average annual 10-percent attrition rate among teachers keeps the student-teacher ratio fairly balanced, the minister said, but the balance can be thrown off if the number of teachers being trained continues at its current high level.

June 1 Deadline For Addicts

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

The Alcohol and Drug Commission plans to cut off the supply of methadone to all addicts who registered for the voluntary program after June 1.

Commission director Bert Hoskins revealed this Friday, one day after the deadline had passed.

Hoskins, in an interview from Vancouver, said only those addicts registered for methadone treatment before June 1 would be allowed to continue receiving the drug when the new compulsory treatment plan begins Jan. 1.

Those who start after will either have to withdraw from the drug by Dec. 31 or be liable for entry into the three-year compulsory program, he said.

News of the deadline stunned John Cantelon, supervisor of the Victoria Methadone Clinic. He said he was not aware the commission planned to take such an action.

"I had thought there would have been an amnesty between now and when the plan is due to start," he said.

Hoskins said a cut-off date had to be set some time and noted the methadone program has been offered for years in the province and addicts have had every chance to register for treatment.

"A person just can't flog in now and expect to circumvent the new program," he said.

In Victoria there were 17 addicts receiving methadone treatment on June 1. One other is due to start next

Bike Ride Ends at High Court

OTTAWA (CP) — When Richard Harvey Moore set out on a brief bicycle ride in Victoria two years ago he was beginning a gruelling 4,800-kilometre journey.

He didn't know it at the time. Nor did he know that he was on his way to the Supreme Court of Canada to fight an important legal battle.

Moore was cycling along Government Street April 19, 1976, when a police officer on a motorcycle roared up and demanded that he pull over. When Moore refused, the motorcycle patrolman forced him into a parked car.

The patrolman, Const. James Sutherland, asked for identification and was planning to charge him with running a red light. Moore said he didn't have any identification and refused to give his name.

Const. Sutherland grabbed him by the arm as he attempted to walk away, and a scuffle ensued. Moore, who suffered a broken finger, was handcuffed and charged with obstructing a police officer.

He was acquitted by a jury after the trial judge ruled that the B.C. Motor Vehicle Act does not require a cyclist to identify himself to police. Unfortunately for him, a B.C. appeal court did not agree, overturned the jury verdict and convicted him.

Undaunted, the 49-year-old Moore put $173 in his pocket, folded up a piece of plastic for overnight shelter, climbed on his 10-speed bicycle and headed east this spring to appeal to the highest court in the land.

"With $173 I almost starved to death," Moore, unemployed and living on welfare, said in an interview this week.

The Victoria-Ottawa journey took 28 days. He began April 28 and found himself slogging through snowstorms in the Rocky Mountains and Northern Ontario.

"There were times when I would have bought accommodation because it was cold but I couldn't afford it."

He slept wherever he could find shelter and managed to borrow replacement tires for his bike.

The high court has agreed to hear his case Tuesday morning. He said that so far his legal expenses have been handled by legal aid. He has obtained the services of Gowling and Henderson, a prestigious Ottawa law firm, to handle the Supreme Court appeal.

His lawyer is expected to argue that a person walking or cycling does not have to stop for police, and that a person has a right to remain silent when questioned on any subject by the police.

Moore said he wants the high court to make a definite decision, not simply to order a new trial.

"But I'm told the Supreme Court of Canada is impudent and afraid to show their power against the provinces."

He used to have a job in electronics but has not worked for at least two years. He said working means paying taxes to support a "lousy Liberal government" that has been in power for 37 of the last 43 years.

"Imagine. I should pay taxes to have a policeman jump me in the street and break my hand."

The court likely will complete the appeal in one day and is expected to reserve its decision. After the hearing Moore plans to stay around Ottawa to try to raise money for the bike trip back.

The Old Master Donkey Builder Cuts into History

Breezed out to the Sooke Region Museum the other day.

There I met a real old-timer, passing on some of his know-how to the youngsters, and a woman whose dream has come true a lot sooner than she expected.

In the shade of the trees beside the museum building, 83-year-old Swedish-born Olof Frederickson was hacking away with his axe and overseeing students (employed through the Young Canada Works program) as they shaped the huge skids that will hold the old steam donkey they are rebuilding.

A master donkey builder in the early days of logging in the Sooke district, Olof remembers with affection constructing the steam donkeys that were used to haul the big logs.

"They're all gas or diesel now," Olof, who has lived in the Sooke region since 1926, says a little sadly.

It was a year ago that I first went out to watch a group of modern-day pioneers putting up the log building that was to house their museum. They were hurrying to get it finished to open by July 2 and I remember Elida Peers sounding a little apologetic.

"When we open, of course, it won't be a perfected museum at that stage," she had explained back then. "It will be some years before we're good . . ."

"Well, it's less than a year since the Lions Club handed over the building to the Sooke Region Historical Society," points out society president Ray Vowles. "And we're good already — or at least we like to think we are."

* * *

And, when you wander through the museum and see the exhibits and the hours of caring and work that must have gone into them, you realize he knows what he's talking about. They are good.

Reopened recently after being closed during the winter to allow more exhibits to be worked in, the museum is on the corner just over the bridge where you make that right-hand turn each summer to go to All-Sooke Day. It operates from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily during the summer.

In the first few months from July 2 to November when it was closed, more than 4,000 people went through the museum and Elida Peers, museum director and archivist, expects a lot more than that this summer.

Displays include those on the natural history of the area, farming, logging, fishing, as well as the clothing and utensils used by the early pioneers, and an Indian display.

There's a huge collection of photographs from the old days, paintings by artists of the district and a large scrapbook you can look through.

Upstairs in the attic of the log building there's a crude little theatre where an exceptionally well-produced slide show on Sooke's history is shown three times (11 a.m., 1:30 and 3:30 p.m.) daily. There is no admittance charge — just a silver collection box — and in all it's a professional effort.

* * *

And Elida says a lot of the praise must go to officials at the Provincial Museum for their help, and to the incredibly community-minded people of Sooke.

"Right from the start we've had co-operation from firms, like the logging companies that donated the logs for the building and for the donkey skids and from individuals who have given us many of the artifacts and their time," Elida says.

"At least 500 people have given some kind of assistance on this project and I'd say that's a conservative estimate," she adds. "And their interest has never waned. Just last week I sent out 60 thank-you letters to people who helped get the displays ready in time for the reopening."

There are many more tales to tell of the lengths some people have gone to get interesting things to give to the museum. Of local families like the one that was offered $1,500 for an antique phonograph but decided to give it to the museum instead.

A true example of community spirit.

One nice day, why not pop out and have a look over it. And take in the 40-minute slide show. It's well worth it.

You'll probably wish your community had such a museum. Even maybe that you lived in such a community . . .

Firemen Talking With City

The contract dispute beteween the Victoria Firefighters Union and the city moved a step closer to solution during a meeting Friday with mediator Clark Gilmour, union president Richard Brideson said today.

"There were reports that negotiations had broken down," he said. "But this was not so. We consider it the first sign of serious negotiations."

The union and city representative at the meeting had followed the mediator's instructions in "costing out" the union's demands which were supposed to have equalled a package of six per cent, he said.

Brideson said the joint examination showed the actual wage package figure to be 5.98 per cent.

He said the union is holding its demands to 5.98 per cent in keeping with anti-inflation guidelines.

A counter offer of 5.1 was made by Carl Anshelm, chief negotiator for the the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association, but this was not accepted, he said.

"I guess that's where the suggestion came in that talks had broken down," Brideson said.

He said that next Thursday and Friday has been set aside by the mediator for further talks.

City Defeats Province In Business Tax Fight

The provincial government must pay municipal business tax and licence fees for Crown corporations and government-owned commercial companies, a Victoria county court judge ruled Friday.

The ruling could have wide implications for all B.C. municipalities.

Victoria city solicitor Jakob de Villiers said today municipalities now may be able to collect business taxes from other government operations like liquor stores and the B.C. Buildings Corporation.

He said he will prepare a report for city council after he has studied the incorporating statutes of each Crown corporation.

"Each case varies," he said. "For example, we could never collect business tax and licence fees from B.C. Hydro because they are specifically exempt through statute."

De Villiers said he will wait to see if Friday's decision is appealed by the province before proceeding with his study.

The city of Victoria took the government to court after it refused to pay $548 business tax on 932 Yates, owned by the provincial government and operated as a parking lot.

Judge Montague Drake, in a written decision, said the government is capable of carrying on resident business within the Municipal Act, the government is not exempt from paying business tax, the government is capable of carrying on businesses mentioned in the 1919 City of Victoria Act and it is not exempt from paying licence fees.

Drake concurred with an earlier definition of business as "anything which occupies the time and attention and labor of a man for the purpose of profit."

For Victoria, de Villiers argued that the provincial government can do anything unless expressly forbidden by statute and no prohibition exists to prevent the province from carrying on business.

The government's lawyer, H.L. Henderson, argued that the province is incapable in law of engaging in business for profit or gain.

But Drake said what would mean business as he has defined it, when carried on by a person, "undergoes a mysterious metamorphosis when carried on by the Sovereign simply because, in law, the Sovereign can no more sully her hands with trade than she can do no wrong.

"The maxim that the Sovereign can do no wrong, a notion of the greatest utility in constitutional and administrative law, proves on examination to be as false a fiction as ever existed. Our constitution would never have developed at all were it not for the firm conviction of generations of legislators, judges and rebels that, far from being incapable of doing wrong, the Sovereign would inevitably do so at every opportunity unless rigidly controlled.

"I mention this maxim only to support my opinion that our constitution consists, in its essentials, of a series of constraints upon executive power. It is a prohibitory constitution.

"And it follows that the Sovereign is free to do anything that pleases her, unless prevented by law. Under such statutes as the Crown Proceedings Act, 1974, the Sovereign can now be sued in her own courts for the tortious acts of her servants.

"Why not, then, taxed for their commercial activities? In my view, in a full-blown, burgess-controlled, constitutional monarchy such as prevails in this country, the Crown is capable of doing anything that is not actually prohibited by positive law."

City Wooing The Japanese

Japan hardly knows Victoria exists as far as the tourist industry is concerned, but this will soon change, says Visitors Information Centre president Ted Balderson.

The problem, he said, is Tokyo visitors to British Columbia are thinking in terms of Vancouver, which is the landing terminal for international flights.

Many of them have never heard of Victoria until after they get here.

But a Japanese television crew came to Victoria to do a special on Lester Pearson College of the Pacific and was so enamored of the area it decided to shoot a half-hour TV special on the attractions of Victoria.

This program will be shown soon on Japan's national TV network.

Balderson said this prime coverage should be followed up by the department of travel with advertising in the Japanese market that includes Vancouver Island as well as Vancouver.

He said he understands the department of travel is planning a vigorous promotion campaign in Japan — and Victoria should be specifically mentioned.

Balderson was commenting on a report out of Vancouver that there is a boom under way in Japanese tour business.

Tremor Forerunner Of a Real Biggie?

An earth tremor that struck northern Vancouver Island Friday could be a prelude to a major earthquake in the area in the next decade, Dr. Robin Riddihough of the Pacific Geoscience Centre at Patricia Bay said.

Riddihough said the quake was caused by a small land plate, on which Vancouver Island sits, being forced under the North American continent by a land plate under the Pacific Ocean.

The centre of the quake, which measured 5.1 on the Richter scale, was in the Zeballos area and the tremor was felt in Port Hardy, Port Alice, Alert Bay and Port McNeill. It hit at 1:45 p.m. and lasted about three seconds. There were no reports of damage or injury.

"It was a flash type of thing," an RCMP officer in Port Hardy said. "Dishes shook and windows rattled. It wasn't too serious."

Riddihough said the same geological formation is expected to prompt a major earthquake of about seven on the Richter scale sometime in the next 10 years. A reading of six is considered the line between major and minor damage, he said.

He said experts don't expect a loss of life if there is a major quake in the area. Deaths occur, he said, because of poor building construction such as happened recently in Central America.

Riddihough said Vancouver Island sits on a tectonic plate, about 200 kilometres wide. It stretches from the Queen Charlotte Islands to California and sits between the Pacific plate and the America plate, both of which measure about 6,000 kilometres wide.

"The Juan de Fuca plate (on which Vancouver Island sits) is being forced underneath the America plate by the Pacific plate," he said, with the resulting pressure sparking the quake.

The last major quake struck eastern Vancouver Island in 1946 and measured 7.3 on the Richter scale, he said. It was centred in Courtenay.

"It caused a fair amount of damage — a chimney fell through the roof of a local school and a facade fell off a store front," he said.

Wosk Burned By City Hall

Vancouver businessman Ben Wosk said here Friday his plans for expansion and investment here are being frustrated by city hall bureaucracy.

Wosk's Ltd., about to open its 14th B.C. furniture and appliance store on Store Street, is also in the accommodation and convention business and has Victoria in mind for a new hotel.

Wosk said he had had discouraging response when outlining his prospective operations in the capital, but within a few days he was going back to city hall "to see if I can talk sense to them."

He cited quibbling about the color of tiles on the front of the new store as one of the difficulties, and the location of a store building site at Finlayson and Burnside.

"Maybe I'm bitter, but I think there are so many departments and so on that can say 'no', and there isn't one department that says, 'You have a problem. Let's straighten it out. Let's see what we can do.'"

Instead, he said he is likely to encounter the attitude: " 'Wosk, you are guilty; you're trying to put something over.' "

Wosk said as a free enterpriser 47 years in the Lower Mainland he believed local councils should do their best to bring business, industry and employment to a city. He disagreed that Canadians do not want to take chances and risk capital on ventures.

Whether there are further Wosk undertakings in Victoria, including a new store, depends on the tenor of his talks within the next few days, he said. He does plan to expand retail operations to other parts of Vancouver Island, such as Nanaimo, and into Alberta.

The store opening here next Thursday in the former wholesale meat warehouse at Store and Herald will employ about 20 full-time staff, said Wosk vice-president Peter Weichel. He said it was a timely expansion for Wosk's volume operation because some of its "weaker sister" competitors had gone out of business here.

Place Names Honor War Dead

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Hundreds of men and women killed in the Second World War have been memorialized by having B.C. mountains, creeks and lakes named after them.

But in the majority of cases the families have never been notified.

Don Pearson, of the provincial mapping and surveying branch, says the government used to advise the families but hasn't since the early 1960s because of difficulty tracking down next-of-kin.

Although the practice of naming unnamed geographical features after war dead has fallen off in the '70s, Pearson says he has resorted to the B.C. War Casualties List about 100 times since he was appointed head of the naming section six years ago.

None of those families was ever told.

He says he turns to the list when there is no local history that would produce an appropriate name and when no other name is proposed.

In the past he has tried to key names of the war dead to the same general area the servicemen came from.

But that isn't possible any more because the lists of names from once-sparsely populated interior areas — which still abound with unnamed features — have already been used up.

For example, all 10 war casualties from Prince George have been commemorated by having mountains in the area named after them. But relatively few names have been drawn from casualties lists of larger centres such as Vancouver or Victoria.

Pearson says he regularly gets requests from people to use the name of someone who has died in naming new geographic features, and always tries to oblige. He hesitates, however, when it comes to common surnames.

"The Smiths and Jones are out of luck," he says. "There are just too many of them around."

It's a different story for names such as Robert Perkins and David Vanstone, of Campbell River, who were killed in the Second World War. They have mountains named after them. Victoria-raised John Benton, killed in action on July 11, 1943, is now memorialized by Benton Peak. And William Davidson and Herbert Paige, both of Esquimalt, have been commemorated, too. Davidson's name has been given to a mountain in Alberta where he came from and Paige's to a channel in the Gulf Islands.

Pearson isn't the only one who uses the casualties list. Hydrographic survey crews refer to it for naming coastal features. In a survey of Otter Passage to McKay Reach, 13 names were plucked from the list of Victoria airmen who lost their lives in the war. They included Edward Blenkinsop, Arthur Buckle, Edward Corbett, Walter Fernyhough, Colin Finlayson, Edmond Fleishman, Cecil Hulke, Harvey Minnis, Charles Mitchell, Edward Taylor, Richard Taylor, Thomas Waterman and Edwin Williams.

The names, however, constitute only a tiny fraction of the estimated 40,000 place names in the province and are even less than the 400 to 500 new names added to the provincial geographical names list each year.

While Pearson makes the selection, the name isn't official until it is approved by Environment Minister Jim Nielsen, Pearson's boss. In other provinces, notably Quebec and Ontario, the selection is by a separate naming commission established by statute.

Once the name is approved it is gazetted by the Canadian Permanent Committee of Geographical Names, of which Pearson is B.C.'s lone member.

The committee published a complete listing last in 1966. Names added since then are included in yearly supplements.

SLOWER RISE IN U.S. PRICES

WASHINGTON (WP) — Wholesale prices rose 0.7 percent in May, down sharply from the 1.3 percent surge in April, the Labor Department reported Friday, but government economists found little solace in the apparent slowdown.

The department also reported that the May unemployment rate edged up from 6.0 to 6.1 percent, an increase economists say is insignificant.

Armageddon in Four Years, Historian Fears

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — Armageddon may be closer than the world thinks, a disarmament meeting was told Friday.

But while U.S. historian Dorothy Baker predicted nuclear war might come as soon as 1982, Canadian disarmament expert Norman Alcock was more optimistic, saying it might happen in the 1980s but does not have to happen.

The two were speaking at a people's assembly, one of a series of meetings and rallies being staged by non-governmental organizations in conjunction with the UN special General Assembly session on disarmament.

Dr. Baker based her conclusion—"we are at the crucial climax of civilization"—on a complicated study of cyclical forces in history. Using a complicated framework, she compares the rise and fall of past civilizations to the present and concludes that war might come in four years.

Alcock, director of the Canadian Institute for Peace Research in Oakville, Ont., uses a computer model to study disarmament, war and the prospects for peace.

And while he admits that one of his scenarios did produce gradual, increasing tensions through the end of the 1980s, leading to more and more conflicts, that is not inevitable.

Alcock is a former nuclear scientist who abandoned a career at Canada's Atomic Research Facility at Chalk River, Ont., to study peace.

He said his computer model takes in much more than just a study of cyclical trends.

"It was made up of arms races, military alliances, territorial problems . . . some of the variables stayed in and others did not."

He said his program for disarmament, starting in 1982 is based on his computer studies. It calls for 10-per-cent reductions in military budgets each year until the end of the century.

"Then, the model generated itself year by year," he went on. "The tension that arms spending produced . . . dropped. At the same time, we siphoned off money from disarmament to stimulate the domestic budgets of each country."

That, in turn, allowed more money to go to the poorer countries, producing "a better world than we have today."

Alcock said he thinks Canadians are in a good position to provide moral leadership by taking concrete steps on disarmament.

And while he did not go along with everything Dr. Baker had to say, there was agreement when she warned: "The world and the planet are at stake."

CELEBRATING their 65th wedding anniversary Sunday are Mr. and Mrs. George Robinson of 3069 Henderson. They will hold open house between 3 and 5 p.m. Robinson, founder of Robinson Sporting Goods, will be 90 in October. They were married in Metropolitan United Church, then the Methodist Church, in 1913. It was then the Methodist Church: Mrs. Robinson has been teacher and supervisor of the primary department of Metropolitan for 58 years. (John McKay photo)

CARTER FIRM ON FAST SALT

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter says he is determined to complete a strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT) with the Soviet Union "without delay."

Carter made the statement Friday while denouncing as "totally inaccurate" a story in the Washington Post that the administration had effectively frozen the negotiations.

In another development, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, without mentioning Carter's comments or The Post story, said in a Soviet television interview broadcast Friday: "The Soviet leadership begins to think that the U.S. administration quite often gives little support to the agreement and does not give a due rebuff to its adversaries."

Carter told White House correspondents that The Post story was both damaging to the United States and to his credibility.

Citing unidentified "authoritative sources," the newspaper said "the net effect of new administration tactics for SALT is to reject any new Soviet proposals for the time being."

Directly challenging this assertion, Carter said his basic policy has not changed—"that is, to proceed aggressively with the SALT discussion."

He said that before The Post published the story its reporters were informed their account was totally inaccurate but that "the editors decided to go ahead with it anyway."

"With the greatest respect, we still believe that our information is correct, that recent decisions taken by the administration have had the effect of freezing SALT negotiations in such a way that agreement this summer is precluded."

Chinese Minister Flies to Zaire

Times News Services

KINSHASA, Zaire — Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua flew to Zaire today in what diplomats said was an unusually open attempt to counter rising Soviet and Cuban influence in Africa.

The Chinese mission was independent, but apparently coordinated with the policies of Western countries which will be meeting in Paris Monday to discuss future aid to Zaire.

"We have similar interests to the Chinese in Africa and Zaire, but we are not working in conjunction with them," an American source said. "The Chinese interest here is to keep the Soviets out."

American sources said Huang discussed the African situation at length in Washington last week with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

The subject also was discussed during conversations which National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski had with Chinese government leaders in Peking last month, the sources said.

Diplomats said it was unusual for China to take such a highly visible stand on an issue.

China has always been close to the Kinshasa government of President Mobutu Sese Seko. They have a large embassy in Kinshasa and, among other projects, are running an experimental farm at the presidential retreat at Nsele, just north of Kinshasa. Several Chinese medical teams also operate in Zaire.

The Chinese also actively supported the two Western-leaning guerrilla groups that lost out to the present Marxist rulers of neighboring Angola.

Diplomatic sources said Mobutu, who just returned from a trip to embattled Shaba province, was expected to hold talks with Huang immediately after the foreign minister arrived on a flight from Paris.

One diplomatic source said Zaire army troops "have just about finished cleaning out the houses" after a week of pillaging in Kolwezi, where more than 1,000 persons lost their lives in a nine-day rebel occupation.

In Kinshasa, security preparations were intense in advance of the Chinese minister's visit. The city was full of troops patrolling the streets in armored cars and on foot.

The Paris meeting on Zaire will bring together senior officials from the United States, France, Belgium, Britain and West Germany, who will discuss measures to prop up the nation's foundering economy.

The countries also will discuss possible logistic aid for an African security force that may take over from Belgian and French paratroopers in Shaba province. An advance guard of Moroccan troops already has arrived.

Meanwhile in Washington, a Carter admininstration official said U.S. military transports will begin flying Moroccan troops into Zaire within the next few days—a first sign that a proposed Pan-African peacekeeping force may be taking shape.

In addition, the official, who asked not to be named, said Friday the United States will fly the remaining French legionnaires out of Zaire's war-torn Shaba province.

In Kinshasa, Zaire said today it has resumed coppermining in the key southern town of Kolwezi, exceedingd production levels achieved before last month's rebel insurgency there.

BRITONS KILLED AT BEACH

LONDON (AP) — Gunmen killed five British employees of an aviation company during a beach picnic in the oil-rich Persian Gulf state of Oman, the British foreign office said today.

Two other Britons who were swimming in the sea at the village of Taqa on Oman's Arabian Sea coast survived the attack Friday, a spokesman said.

The seven men all worked for the British Airwork Services Co, which specializes in setting up airport facilities in developing countries, particularly in the Middle East.

All were members of the company's fishing club and were spending the day on the beach, the spokesman said.

CAR-GO RAIL DROPPED

TORONTO (CP) — Via Rail Canada, a federal agency, has announced plans to discontinue Canadian National Railway's Car-Go Rail service.

As a result, a person wishing to ship his car to Vancouver will pay twice as much and will have to wait longer.

Under the Car-Go system, it cost $278 to ship a car to Vancouver from Toronto and delivery took five days.

Persons wishing to ship their cars west now must use Trans-Canada Auto-Train Transport Ltd. which charges $541 and takes seven to 12 days for delivery.

1 Million Starving

LONDON (Reuter) — Up to one million people are starving in Ethiopia's Welo region because of a drought and special airfields are being built to aid relief operations, Addis Ababa radio reported.

The radio, monitored in London, said people in the affected area, northeast of the capital of Addis Ababa, were eating diseased grasses and 47 have died of poisoning.

The radio estimated that between 600,000 and one million people were starving in the western Welo region.

It said Ethiopian leader Col. Mengistu Haile-Mariam has set up a special committee to mount relief operations and three airfields were being built in affected areas to enable planes and helicopters to fly in food.

Meanwhile in Brussels, Claude Cheysson, the European Economic Community's development aid commissioner, said agricultural production in Ethiopia has increased considerably since the country's agrarian revolution was launched in 1974. Cheysson visited Ethiopia last week and met Mengistu.
